

Renewable Fuel Incentives: Estimation of Large Retailers' Margins

Executive Summary

The US Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") has recently been confronted with the argument that large fuel retailers do not benefit from the renewable identification number ("RIN") market through windfall profits or increased margins compared to others in the fuel marketing chain. This report utilizes an Estimated Margin Indicator ("EMI") with inputs from several relevant databases to test this premise with respect to two large unbranded retailers that are large players in the RIN market. While these two large fuel retailers realize margins that exceed average convenience store levels by approximately double, small retailers do not have the ability to enjoy the same excess margins.

I. Background

This paper utilizes a daily snapshot tool known as an Estimated Margin Indicator (“EMI”) to ascertain fuel margins for two large fuel retailers. This method starts with the retail price for a given fuel that is comparable to nearby small retailers. The costs and profits to both the large and the small fuel retailers are embedded in this retail price. The EMI then calculates the additional margin realized by large retailers as a result of the renewable identification number (“RIN”) market. This paper focuses on Pilot/Flying J and Loves because of the considerable amount of information they make public, especially in relation to the over 1,050 stores nationwide. As a consultant with vast experience in the petroleum and renewables industries, I believe the EMI model—and the specific conclusions herein—to be generally applicable to other entities which have similar operations.

By way of background, Pilot/Flying J is one of the largest North American retail distribution companies that started operations in 1958. The first full-service facility opened in Ogden, Utah, in 1979. The Conoco/Flying J joint venture in 1991 was a catalyst that led the transformation of the company into its current market brand. At the time of this paper, the company operates 710 facilities.

The other entity examined, Loves, is a Musket held company, which is a large retailer of petroleum products. Loves operates in a similar manner to Pilot/Flying J. They also publish daily fuel prices for all locations. Because of the Musket relationship, Loves is also a blender of renewables in the marketplace. At the time of this paper, they operate 351 of their own branded stations.

Both entities’ data were input into the EMI model with data from various other inputs. Specifically, data were taken from the Chicago Board of Trade (“CBOT”), the New York Mercantile Exchange (“NYMEX”), the Department of Transportation (“DOT”), the Energy Information Agency (“EIA”), the Environmental Protection Agency (“EPA”), the Iowa State University Ethanol and Biodiesel Profit Tools, the Internal Revenue Service (“IRS”), the Oil and Petroleum Information Service (“OPIS”), and various state tax and revenue agencies.

The EMI, as shown in Appendix One, graphically detailed in Appendix Two, and explained step-by-step in Appendix Three, demonstrates that Pilot/Flying J and Love’s margins exceed the National Association of Convenience Stores (“NACS”) average of $.189 cents by nearly double. This is because these companies enjoy a strong financial advantage over companies that distribute and sell petroleum fuels. The ultimate effect could be selective losses in market share for smaller, less sophisticated market participants. Small retailers are placed at a serious competitive disadvantage because they do not have access to the excess margins enjoyed by Pilot/Flying J, Loves, and other large fuel retailers.

II. Key Findings

While the entire EMI is available in Appendix One, a summary of the results for both Pilot/Flying J and Loves follow. In both instances, these entities' combined gross profits are almost twice as high as the national average. Furthermore, a pass-through to customers did not occur, as additional RIN-derived margins are retained by large fuel retailers as profits. To the contrary, small fuel retailers, which do not have access to similar margins, are likely to lose market share as a result. If the Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") were to alter the point-of-obligation under the Renewable Fuel Standard ("RFS"), small fuel retailers would be considerably more likely to be able to achieve price parity with large fuel retailers and sustain operations in local markets that continue to thrive based in substantial part on robust retail competition.

a) Pilot Flying J

The EMI derives gross margins for E-10 blends and various biodiesel blends, along with gross combined margins across both products.

For E-10 blends, the EMI finds that on December 21, 2016, the average margin per gallon was $0.1515 for all Pilot/Flying J retail outlets. Across the nation and depending on location, stores reported ranges between -$0.1265 and $0.5190 per gallon.

For biodiesel blends (of varied blended ratios), the EMI finds that on December 21, 2016, the average margin per gallon was $0.5134 for all Pilot/Flying J retail outlets. Across the nation and depending on location, stores reported ranges between $0.1050 to $0.9500 per gallon.

When taking into account margins on both E10 blends and various biodiesel blends, the EMI finds that on December 21, 2016, there was a nationwide range in gross combined margins between $0.2675 and $1.3106 per gallon for Pilot/Flying J retail outlets, depending on location. The EMI found $0.6649 per gallon as the per store average nationwide.

E-10	Diesel Blends	Combined Per Store
Min Per Gal	Min Per Gal	Min Per Gal
$(0.1265)	$0.1050	$0.2675

Average Per Store/Gal	Average Per Store/Gal	Average Per Store/Gal
$0.1515	$0.5134	$0.6649

b) Loves

The EMI similarly derives gross margins for E-10 blends and various biodiesel blends, along with gross combined margins across both products.

For E10 blends, the EMI finds that on December 5, 2016, the average margin per gallon was $0.1459 for all Loves retail outlets. Across the nation and depending on location, stores reported ranges between $0.0765 and $0.5143 per gallon.

For biodiesel blends (of varied blend ratios), the EMI finds that on December 5, 2016, the average margin per gallon was $0.5073 for all Loves retail outlets. Across the nation and depending on location, stores reported ranges between $0.0978 to $0.9162 per gallon.

When taking into account margins on both gasoline ethanol and biodiesel blends, the EMI finds that on December 5, 2016, there was a nationwide range in gross margins between $0.3087 and $1.1883 per gallon for Loves retail outlets, depending on location. The nationwide store average was $0.6532 per gallon.

E-10	Diesel Blends	Combined Per Store
Min Per Gal	Min Per Gal	Min Per Gal
$(0.0765)	0.0978	$0.3087
Max Per Gal	Max per Gal	Max per Gal

Average Per Store/Gal	Average Per Store/Gal	Average Per Store/Gal
$0.1459	$0.5073	$0.6532

III. Discussion

Up until this point data limitations and modeling complexity have confounded proper assessment of fuel margins, but the EMI accounts for these limitations by taking the novel approach of utilizing reliable daily information to demonstrate the composition—and distribution—of margins within fuels markets. The conclusions drawn from the EMI also provide a basis for subsequent monthly, quarterly, and annual projections that can instill greater certainty into the true dynamics of retail fuel competition—and the fuel market writ large.

In sum, the model shows that large fuel retailers, but not small fuel retailers, are receiving margins that are nearly double the national average to the detriment of overall market competition. Furthermore, it shows that no financial harm would befall large fuel retailers if the point of obligation were to be altered.

About the Author

Ramon M Benavides entered the US Renewable Fuel Sector as a partner/producer for a biodiesel facility in October 2006 through Feb 2012. During that period, he oversaw RIN trading activities for the company and, participated with the National Biodiesel Board by serving the regulatory, technical committees and RFS1 working group.

In 2010, he was nominated and elected to the NBB governing board and served that position until the end of the term in 2012. In early 2012, he left the production program and began Global Renewable Strategies and Consulting, LLC based upon an identified need for competent business consulting with the US renewable programs.

As a consultant, he has served Obligated Parties, Renewable Fuel Producers, Foreign Renewable Fuel Producers, Legal counsels, Tax Counsels, Accountants and others. He has monitored and advised RINs Trading/Renewable Fuels transactions and has observed and deployed many trading strategies.

He developed the first Compliance Surety Survey that tracks 1200 items daily, the first and only patent pending Forensic Surveillance Testing program, and a newly developed Forensic Mass Balance Protocol that when combined with the FST provides near term identification of issues and further authenticates RIN generations outside of the EPA QAP program.

Appendix Three - Step-By-Step Guide to Understanding the EMI

This explanatory guide provides a detailed explanation of the columns/data found in the EMI. The guide utilizes Pilot/Flying J as a reference case and splits discussion between gasoline, ethanol, and biodiesel. The cumulative results explained above are derived from calculations internal to the EMI.

I. Gasoline Ethanol

A. Core Terms

At the outset, the EMI model for gasoline ethanol relies on several foundational inputs that critically influence the values derived in other portions of the EMI.

- E100 FOB --- This value refers to neat ethanol; values are further subdivided to account for transportation costs, and transportation costs less the value of a RIN.
- RIN --- This value refers to the daily price of a RIN on the date for which the EMI model was run.
- National Average RBOB --- This value refers to Reformulated Gasoline Blendstock for Oxygen Blending ("RBOB"), or unblended "gasoline" or "petrol."
- Terminal Cost --- This value refers to the price of blending ethanol or biodiesel to the owner of the hydrocarbons.

B. Specific Terms and Calculations

- Basic Background Information --- Core identifying information for a given store are available in the first several columns.
- Retail E10 --- This value refers to the price of E10 at a given retail station. I expect the price to be substantially similar at other fuel retailers in close proximity, whether small or large. This value is taken directly from data furnished by Pilot/Flying J and Loves. This price includes all operating costs and reasonable margins, since it is likely similar to the prices of small fuel retailers nearby.
- Tax --- This value refers to all applicable state and federal taxes at a given locale.
- Wholesale E10 --- This value refers to the price of E10 at a given retail station, less all applicable state and federal taxes.

- RBOB Portion --- This value refers to 90% of the price of E10 at a given locale, less all applicable state and federal taxes. 90% is utilized to account for the 10% blending rate of ethanol. Accordingly, this value accounts for the portion of aggregate Wholesale E10 belonging to, or associated with, RBOB. This number corresponds to National Average RBOB, not Retail E10.
- Ethanol Portion --- This value refers to 10% of the price of E10 at a given locale, less all applicable state and federal taxes. 10% is utilized because all conventional gasoline in the United States contains 10% ethanol. Accordingly, this value accounts for the portion of aggregate Wholesale E10 belonging to, or associated with, ethanol, not RBOB. Furthermore, this number corresponds to E100 FOB less the RIN.
- E10 Price --- This value refers to the addition of the RBOB Portion and Ethanol Portion respectively.
- RIN Incentive --- This value refers to 10% of the daily RIN price. 10% is utilized because all conventional gasoline in the United States contains 10% ethanol. Accordingly, this value accounts for the portion of aggregate Wholesale E10 belonging to, or associated with, ethanol, not RBOB.
- E10 Minus RIN Plus Terminal --- This value refers to the E10 Price, less the cost of the RIN, plus terminal costs. This represents E10 after consideration of the RIN price, incentives, taxes, and the cost of blending.
- Ethanol Margin --- This value refers to the cost of Wholesale E10 less E10 Minus RIN Plus Terminal. This represents the gross margin on E10 at the particular station on the given day that large retailers derive as a benefit from the RIN market.

II. Biodiesel Ethanol

A. Core Terms

At the outset, the EMI model for gasoline ethanol relies on several foundational inputs that influence the values derived in other portions of the EMI.

- B100 with RIN --- This value refers to neat biodiesel; values are further subdivided to account for transportation costs, transportation costs less the value of a RIN, the biodiesel tax credit ("BTC"), and California's Low Carbon Fuel Standard ("LCFS").
- RIN --- This value refers to the daily price of RINs on the date for which the EMI model was run.
- Excise --- Excise Tax Refund known as the Blenders Tax Credit for Biomass Based Diesels.

- CI --- Carbon Intensity Value for Low Carbon Fuel Standard Programs.
- National Average Diesel --- This value refers to the national average price for diesel.

B. Specific Terms and Calculations

- Diesel --- This value refers to the price of diesel at a given retail station. I expect the price to be substantially similar at other fuel retailers in close proximity, whether small or large. This value is taken directly from data furnished by Pilot/Flying J and Loves. This price includes all operating costs and reasonable margins, since it is likely similar to the prices of small fuel retailers nearby.
- Tax --- This value refers to all applicable state and federal taxes at a given locale.
- Wholesale Diesel --- This value refers to the price of diesel at a given locale, less all applicable state and federal taxes.
- Blend Concentration --- Unlike gasoline ethanol which has a static blend concentration, rates vary for biodiesel. The EMI for biodiesel accounts for the local blend concentration rate accordingly.
- Diesel Portion --- This value refers to the local blend concentration rate weighted against the national average diesel cost. Accordingly, this value accounts for the portion of aggregate Wholesale Diesel belonging to, or associated with, diesel. This number corresponds to National Average Diesel, not Retail Diesel.
- Biodiesel Portion --- This value refers to the local blend concentration rate weighted against the national average diesel cost. Accordingly, this value accounts for the portion of aggregate Wholesale Diesel belonging to, or associated with, biodiesel.
- Diesel Blend Cost --- This value refers to the addition of the Diesel Portion and the Biodiesel Portion respectively.
- RIN BTC LCFS Incentive --- This value accounts for various state and federal incentives. First, it accounts for a select percent (weighted by the blend concentration) of the daily RIN price. Second, it account for the Biodiesel Tax Credit ("BTC"). Finally, it accounts for California's Low Carbon Fuel Standard ("LCFS") incentive.
- State Incentive --- This value accounts for state-specific incentives external to those outlined above.
- Biodiesel Margin --- This value refers to the addition of "RIN BTC LCFS Incentive" and the "State Incentive." This represents the gross margin on biodiesel at the particular station on the given day that large retailers then derive as a benefit from the RIN market.

- Total Margin At Station --- This value refers to the addition of the Ethanol Margin and the Biodiesel Margin.
