RE: Proposed Denial of Petitions for Rulemaking to Change the RFS Point of

Dear Ms. Dunham:

From 2013 until 2015 I participated in the interagency review process for the Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA or the "Agency") Renewable Fuel Standard (RFS) program while serving on the staff of the National Economic Council at the White House. Since then I have had the opportunity to reflect upon the difficult challenges confronting policymakers faced with the task of implementing an RFS statute in a world and energy sector that has radically changed since the statute was last amended,<sup>2</sup> and since EPA first defined "obligated party,"<sup>3</sup> in 2007.

There is no doubt that managing the RFS program for the last four years has presented the Agency with intricate, and often intractable, policy decisions. How you resolve these issues will ultimately dictate the future viability of this program and, by extension, impact the future of alternative fuels in the United States, the health of major sectors of the U.S. economy, and the level of benefits to our nation's energy security and environment envisioned by Congress when the statute was enacted.

In this proceeding you are examining whether to move the Point of Obligation, an issue that I worked on while at the White House. Given my experience and interest in the issue, I want to take this opportunity to share with you some of the conclusions I have reached after careful reflection on the program.

In summary, I am among the voices, which include the Petitioners in this proceeding, who have argued that EPA should redefine the Point of Obligation to align incentives for all participants in the program and ensure that they all have an incentive to blend motor fuels containing higher percentages of ethanol. EPA has acknowledged that the arguments are consistent with sound regulatory principles, but responds that in this instance, the arguments ignore the complicated relationships that exist in the fuels marketplace, as well as observations about the current marketers of E85, which suggest that those principles should not inform the policy decision before the Agency.<sup>4</sup> I believe that EPA has mistakenly focused on the wrong relationships in the supply chain and examined the incorrect data concerning the number of fueling stations that sell E85.

If EPA examines the relationships and data that I describe below, I believe that it will reach the inescapable conclusion that moving the Point of Obligation from importers and refiners to the blender at the terminal rack, a point in the supply chain through which all fuel passes, from which motor fuel is distributed, and where motor fuel is taxed, offers EPA an opportunity to increase the incentives for obligated parties to blend ethanol into the gasoline supply, facilitate the sale of E85 at more retail outlets, and reduce the cost of the program. EPA has the legal authority to make this change to the program and could do so by the end of this year.

I will first summarize the economic and regulatory principles that demonstrate why moving the Point of Obligation will improve the RFS. I will then explain why EPA examined the incorrect relationships in the fuel marketplace and the incorrect data in reaching its own conclusions, and how an examination of the correct relationships and data support moving the Point of Obligation.

I. BRINGING MORE RENEWABLE FUEL TO MARKET

While the original supporters of the RFS may have had varied motivations—from energy security to environmental stewardship—the primary first-order goal of the RFS today remains the same as it was in 2005 when it was enacted and 2007 when it was amended: to substantially increase the volume of renewable fuel blended into the transportation pool. This was the fundamental purpose of the statute and it remains its most pressing challenge. For the majority of the program’s existence, renewable fuel producers and obligated parties were part of a system that had manageable mandates and ample room within the nation’s fuel supply to grow.

When the 2007 amendments to the RFS were passed, they effectively mandated that the fuel supply absorb 15 billion gallons of conventional ethanol each year beginning in 2015,<sup>5</sup> a year in which EIA was then forecasting gasoline demand of 163 billion gallons.<sup>6</sup> As depicted in Figure 1, had actual demand been near to EIA’s forecast, the 15 billion gallons of conventional ethanol would have constituted 9.2 percent of the gas demand, allowing ample room for the supply to absorb the conventional ethanol without breaching the “blend wall.” In fact, however, demand for gasoline grew more slowly than forecast. Initially, motor vehicle drivers drove less because they had less money due to the recession. As they started to drive more, they did so in cars that were increasingly efficient because new vehicle fleet fuel economy improved by an average of 0.8 mpg/year between 2010 and 2014.<sup>7</sup>

The result was that demand for gasoline in 2015 was approximately 138.4 billion gallons, 25 billion gallons less than forecast when the RFS standards were enacted.<sup>8</sup> For the fuel supply to absorb 15 billion gallons ethanol, it would have to constitute about 10.8 percent of the fuel supply, a level the fuel supply could not easily accommodate because of the ethanol “blend wall.”

Much of the U.S. fuel distribution and consumption infrastructure was designed to operate on fuel containing no more than 10 percent ethanol, which creates the “blend wall.” Fueling infrastructure, including underground storage tanks at gasoline stations and gasoline pumps were, until recent years, generally designed and certified to accommodate no more than 10 percent ethanol.<sup>9</sup> Similarly, vehicles also were generally designed to operate on fuel containing no more than 10 percent ethanol until a few years ago.<sup>10</sup> A small portion of the fleet, perhaps about 20 million vehicles, are flexible fuel vehicles that can operate on fuel containing up to 85 percent ethanol.<sup>11</sup> The blend wall can be estimated at about 10 percent of the fuel consumed plus the additional volume of ethanol contained in the higher blends of ethanol sold including E15, on which many new cars can operate, E85, on which flexible fuel vehicles can operate, and other blends in between these levels. As the volume of the fuel sold as higher blends designed to operate in flexible fuel or other vehicles grows, the blend wall moves to reflect the additional space in the total fuel supply for ethanol.

<sup>10</sup> See Regarding Fuels and Fuel Additives. Gasohol; Marketability, 44 Fed. Reg. 20777 (April 6, 1977). While EPA and DOE have certified that vehicles manufactured after 2001 can operate on E15, vehicle manufacturers have

As has been ably and more thoroughly discussed in other papers, and in the preambles to EPA's 2013 final RVO rule and 2014 proposed RVO rule, the real test of the program's functionality began in late 2012 and early 2013.<sup>12</sup> Prior to then, there was ample room in the fuel supply to accommodate the lower statutory mandates without approaching the blend wall. Moreover, over much of that time period, ethanol cost less than gasoline blendstock,<sup>13</sup> meaning that it cost less to produce finished gasoline containing up to 10 percent ethanol than clear gasoline, and consumers were oblivious to the small penalty in fuel economy due to the lower energy content of the ethanol. By the end of 2012, however, the market recognized that the fuel supply could no longer accommodate the mandated volume of ethanol.

The combination of reduced demand for fuel, the effective limit on ethanol blend rates, and limited infrastructure for higher ethanol blends shocked the market for Renewable Identification Numbers ("RINs")—the primary means of compliance with the RFS. Whereas the price of RINs had been de minimis through 2012, the RIN price rose to nearly $1 by March 2013 and climbed to well over $1 by that summer. The cause for the rapid rise in compliance costs can be seen in the RIN supply curve in Figure 2. In this figure, the supply curve for RINs for conventional renewable fuel is the vertical difference between the ethanol supply curve and the ethanol demand curve when the supply curve is above the demand curve. When demand for ethanol exceeds supply, the price of RINs is zero, so long as ethanol is the low cost source of octane. In that case, the price of RINs is de minimis until the RVO exceeds the blend wall because when the mandate is below the blend wall, it is easy and inexpensive to blend an incremental gallon of ethanol into the fuel supply. However, once ethanol has been blended into the fuel supply at the level of the blend wall, it becomes substantially more difficult (and expensive) to separate a RIN from ethanol. The difficulty in separating a RIN from ethanol reflects the substantial difficulty in blending an incremental gallon of ethanol into the fuel supply because the only place to put the ethanol is into a fuel with a higher blend of ethanol for which there is very limited consumer demand. Because it is harder to blend the incremental gallon of ethanol into the fuel supply at generally declined to confirm that the cars they manufactured can reliably be operated on that fuel. I believe that many drivers would prefer to not use in their vehicle a fuel that the manufacturer of their vehicle has not approved for use in the vehicle, even if the government has indicated its approval, given that drivers, and not the government, would incur the cost of repairing vehicles that are damaged by that fuel.

that point, the demand for ethanol falls sharply. With the statute mandating continued growth in renewable volumes, it was not clear how the obligated parties could meet their obligations to blend specified volumes of conventional renewable fuel into the fuel supply absent fundamental changes to the program or a more rapid increase in the ability of higher ethanol blends (e.g., E85) to break into the market.

Faced with this transformative shift in the market, EPA acknowledged the difficult problem of the ethanol blend wall and indicated in the final rule establishing RVOs for 2013 that it would work to address this challenge as part of the 2014 annual standards rulemaking.<sup>14</sup> Subsequently, in the proposed rule to establish RVOs for 2014, EPA proposed to lower the total renewable fuel, which had the effect of lowering the conventional renewable fuel RVO, in the proposed rule establishing RVOs for 2014.<sup>15</sup> Predictably, this decision generated significant debate amongst stakeholders and resulted in an extended delay prior to the issuance of a combined 2014, 2015 and 2016 rule, in which EPA exercised its waiver authority to lower RVOs below the statutory requirements.<sup>16</sup>

EPA's recent rule establishing RVOs for 2014-2016 had to address the issue of how best to use the program's capabilities and/or market forces to break through the blend wall and bring more renewable fuel into the market. In that rule, EPA took the view that increases in the price of RIN functions to incentivize the type of infrastructure investment necessary to make higher ethanol blends available in a cost-competitive way to consumers.<sup>17</sup> As I discuss in the next section in greater detail, however, I believe both that EPA is wrong in believing that high RIN prices alone will meaningfully expand the demand for E85 and that moving the Point of Obligation is the best way to meet this challenge.

II. PROBLEMS IN E-85 MARKET PENETRATION

Before focusing on why I believe that EPA should move the Point of Obligation, I would like to explain what informs my thinking on the issue of E85 market penetration. In the simplest of terms, the RFS is designed to increase the cost of fuel with little to no renewable content and use that incremental cost to reduce the cost of renewable fuels, with a preference for renewable fuels with a low-carbon content. Stated differently, it could be thought of as a tax on fuel with relatively higher carbon content that is used to subsidize fuel with relatively lower carbon content.<sup>18</sup> Thus, as EPA described in a 2015 proposed rule, a functional market system for the program would be designed to pass the benefits of generating RIN credits from the renewable fuel producer, to the blender, and then to the retail customer.<sup>19</sup> As Christopher Knittel, Ben Meiselman, and James Stock state in their June 2015 paper on this topic, "[i]n theory, RIN prices provide incentives to consumers to use fuels with a high renewable content and to biofuels producers to produce those fuels."<sup>20</sup>

As I stated previously, the early years of the RFS are not especially instructive in evaluating the functionality and effectiveness of this system because there was ample room in the fuel supply to comfortably accommodate the RFS's RVOs within the then current fuel supply and with the then current automotive fleet. However, with the challenges that began in late 2012 and early 2013 as the market recognized that the fuel supply could not accommodate the statutory obligations without breaching the blend wall, the question of how this system was working to incentivize the use of higher ethanol blends increasingly animated the interagency review process. If the market was functioning as expected, and RIN prices were rising—making higher ethanol blends more valuable—why were we not seeing the expected rise in E85 market penetration?

In their June 2015 paper, Knittel et al. analyzed the behavior of the RINs market from January 2013 to March 2015 and described their most troubling finding as follows:

<sup>20</sup> See Christopher R. Knittel, Ben S. Meiselman, and James H. Stock, The Pass-Through of RIN Prices to Wholesale and Retail Fuels under the Renewable Fuel Standard, National Bureau of Economic Research (June 2015), available at: www.nber.org/papers/w21343.

To us, the most intriguing and challenging finding here is the near absence of pass-through of RIN prices to retail E85 prices. While RIN prices might be passed through at some retail outlets at some times, this is not the case on average using national prices. The goal of the RFS program is to expand the use of low-carbon domestic biofuels, and the key economic mechanism to induce consumers to purchase high-renewables blends is the incentives provided by RIN prices. If the RIN price savings inherent in blends with high biofuels content are not passed on to the consumer, then this key mechanism of the RFS is not functioning properly.<sup>21</sup>

In the final rule establishing RVOs for 2014-16, EPA reached the same conclusion. In the preamble to the rule, EPA stated that:

[We] examined available data in an attempt to determine whether or not higher RIN prices resulted in lower E85 prices at retail, and whether lower E85 retail prices lead to substantial increases in E85 sales, as economic theory would suggest would be the case when FFV owners receive better value for purchasing E85 rather than E10. Our analysis suggests that the market was not sufficiently responsive to higher RIN prices to drive large increases in E85 sales volumes in the period of time at question. For instance, we found that between January 2013 and July 2015 only 44% of the RIN value was passed on to E85 customers in the form of lower E85 retail prices . . . . We also found that while sales volumes of E85 did increase as the price discount for E85 relative to E10 increased, these sales increases were both less dramatic than many have assumed, and perhaps more importantly, did not increase sharply when the price discount exceeded energy parity, as others . . . have assumed. While we did not investigate all factors that might slow retail response to changing RIN prices, our observations lead us to conclude that if EPA were to increase the total renewable fuel volume requirement significantly, we would expect to see sharply higher RIN prices, but sales volumes of E85 would be expected to see only modest increases that would be insufficient to enable the market to reach the statutory targets.<sup>22</sup>

Another data point used to evaluate the functionality of the current system is to look at whether the high RIN prices in early 2013 did indeed incentivize increased sale volumes of E85. While there no good source of E85 national sales data, Minnesota, the state with most stations selling E85,<sup>23</sup> collects monthly data on the volume of E85 sold within the state, which is presented in Figure 3. Tellingly, what happened in Minnesota suggested that the program was not working as expected. Between 2013 and 2016, the total volume of E85 sales declined and the average volume of E85 sales per station with E85 declined, even as RINs prices rose. This observation leads me to concur with Knittel et. al.'s conclusion that the RINs market is simply not functioning as it should, or as EPA has been assuming it would.<sup>24</sup>

<sup>24</sup> The issue of properly aligned incentives and the need for infrastructure also exists for biodiesel blending. In order to blend biodiesel, a terminal needs to add significant infrastructure, including: receipt and offloading

III. REDUCING THE COST OF THE RFS

The issue of the appropriate Point of Obligation has been understood as a critical choice in the structure of the RFS since the inception of the program. Where the compliance obligation falls within the fuel supply chain has a tremendous impact on the RFS’ ability to allocate costs, award benefits, incentivize changes in the market, and achieve the goals set out by Congress in the statute. Before discussing why this issue is critically important moving forward, it is important to understand how EPA arrived at placing the Point of Obligation on refiners and importers (i.e., the parties who produce and supply fuel to the rack at fuel terminals) versus blenders (i.e., those parties actually blending the renewable fuel into gasoline and diesel).

In the initial phase of the RFS—from 2005-2007—EPA largely based its decision on Point of Obligation on ease of administration. As EPA explained, “[w]hen the RFS1 regulations were drafted, the obligations were placed on the relatively small number of refiners and importers equipment, dedicated storage tanks, heat traced transfer lines, rack injection meters, and rack automation control systems. See, e.g., Michael Leister, Biofuels Blending Infrastructure, SAE Government and Industry Conference, May 13, 2008; Robert Jagunich, Biofuels Mid-Stream Infrastructure Requirements, California Energy Commission Apr. 14, 2009; Biodiesel Magazine, Infrastructure to Market, Sept. 10, 2010; EN Engineering, Terminal Biodiesel Infrastructure Upgrade, May 15, 2014, available at www.enengineering.com/projects/terminal-biodiesel-infrastructure-upgrade/. The installation of terminal injection projects can cost millions of dollars, See, e.g., California Energy Commission Report, 2011-2012 Investment Plan For the Alternative and Renewable Fuel and Vehicle Technology Program (Report CEC-600-2011-006-CTF), at 116, Aug. 2011; Biodiesel Magazine, Infrastructure to Market, Sept. 10, 2010, and terminal owner-operators need the support and long-term financial commitment of all rack customers to proceed with the necessary capital investments. Because not all customers are in need of RIN’s under the current rules, critical consensus for investing may never mature. This can delay or foreclose the necessary investments in biodiesel infrastructure. This would not happen if all users of the terminal were obligated parties.

rather than on the relatively large number of downstream blenders and terminals in order to minimize the number of regulated parties and keep the program simple.”<sup>25</sup>

In 2009, with the amended program placing increased renewable mandates onto the system, EPA once again considered the issue of whether to place the Point of Obligation on refiners who provide fuels to the market for further distribution at the rack or on the blenders who actually put the renewable fuel into the system. In doing so, EPA considered a new issue—the disparity in compliance burden between major integrated refiners who possess blending operations (which generate RINs) and refiners who are primarily focused on refining and do not generate their own RINs. EPA, however, also considered a potential solution—moving the Point of Obligation from refiners to blenders—specifically recognizing the impact of the blend wall on the viability of the RFS. EPA described the issue as follows:

Given the change in circumstances brought about through EISA, it may be appropriate to consider a change in the way that obligated parties are defined to more evenly align a party’s access to RINs with that party’s obligations under the RFS2 program. The most straightforward approach would be to eliminate [unfinished gasoline] from the list of fuels that are subject to the standard, such that a party’s RVO would be based only on the non-renewable volume of finished gasoline or diesel that he produces or imports. Parties that blend ethanol into [unfinished gasoline] to make finished gasoline would thus be obligated parties, and their RVOs would be based upon the volume of [unfinished gasoline] prior to ethanol blending. Traditional refiners that convert crude oil into transportation fuels would only have an RVO to the degree that they produced finished gasoline or diesel[.] Since essentially all gasoline is expected to be E10 within the next few years...this approach would effectively shift the obligation for all gasoline from refiners and importers to ethanol blenders (who in many cases are still the refiners)...a variation of this approach would be to move the obligations for all gasoline and diesel downstream to parties who supply finished transportation fuels to retail outlets or to wholesale purchaser-consumer facilities.

This variation would have the additional effect of more closely aligning obligations and access to RINs for parties that blend biodiesel and renewable diesel into petroleum-based diesel...it would have certain advantages. Currently, blenders that are not obligated parties are profiting from the sale of RINs they acquire through splash blending of ethanol. By eliminating [unfinished gasoline] from the list of obligated fuels, these blenders would become directly responsible for ensuring that the volume requirements of the RFS program are met, and the cost of meeting the standard would be more evenly distributed among parties that blend renewable fuel into gasoline. With obligations placed more closely to the points in the distribution system where RINs are made available, the overall market prices for RINs may be lowered and consequently the cost of the program to consumers may be reduced.<sup>26</sup>

Despite its recognition of this issue, in the 2010 final rule, EPA elected not to change the Point of Obligation. Once again, EPA cited administrative considerations (“a change in the designation of obligated parties would result in a significant change in the number of obligated parties and the movement of RINs, changes that could disrupt the operation of the RFS program during the transition from RFS1 to RFS2.”), but the Agency did acknowledge that it remained concerned about this issue and that it would revisit the issue of Point of Obligation if necessary. As EPA stated, “[w]e will continue to evaluate the functionality of the RIN market. Should we determine that the RIN market is not operating as intended, driving up prices for obligated parties and fuel prices for consumers, we will consider revisiting this provision in future regulatory efforts.”<sup>27</sup>

In the preamble to the final rule establishing RVOs for 2014-16, EPA noted that changing the point of obligation could “play a role in improving incentives provided by the RFS program to overcome challenges that limit the potential for increased volumes of renewable fuels,” before concluding that such a change was “beyond the scope of [that] rulemaking.”<sup>28</sup>

IV. EPA SHOULD MOVE THE POINT OF OBLIGATION

Based on my review of the data and my experience and knowledge gleaned from meeting with a wide and diverse range of stakeholder groups over the past several years, it is apparent to me that the current RIN market dictates EPA moving the Point of Obligation in the RFS program.

The current Point of Obligation is a significant factor inhibiting greater amounts of E85 from reaching the market due primarily to the lack of properly aligned incentives and the resulting shortfall in blending infrastructure expansion and retail outlets selling E85. Reaching this conclusion only requires extending the reasoning acknowledged above by EPA in 2009, namely: a portion of obligated parties, refiners with large marketing operations, are almost immediately “long” on RINs at the beginning of every compliance period, a position that occurs because when they market more fuel than they refine, they generate more RINs through blending than they need for their own compliance obligations.

Having several large obligated parties structurally long on RINs has important implications for the operation of the RFS program. First, blending high concentrations of ethanol at wholesale distribution facilities at scale often requires modifications to the infrastructure.<sup>29</sup> At many distribution facilities, however, obligated parties long on RINs are the largest customers, and are in a position to effectively block installation of infrastructure to promote large scale E85 blending. Once the RIN-long party has met its own RVO, it has little incentive to participate financially in the expansion of blending infrastructure to allow for higher level blends (E85 and E15) or additional advanced renewable fuels (B5-B20) because it already has the RINs it needs and does not want additional blending to lower the value of its excess RINs. EPA responded in the Proposed Denial of Petitions that “all of the terminal owners/operators [to whom EPA spoke] communicated . . . that they were capable of producing fuel blends that contain a higher proportion of ethanol with their existing equipment,” and “expressed a willingness to make the relatively modest changes necessary to accommodate faster loading times if the existing infrastructure resulted in loading delays for trucks at the rack.”<sup>30</sup> EPA cited notes to three meetings for support of the proposition that terminal operators would make infrastructure upgrades to accommodate blending of E85. The notes for two of the meetings, however, were not placed in the docket because they contained confidential information and the notes from the third meeting did not address this issue.<sup>31</sup> In contrast, Magellan comments in the docket establishing RVOs for 2017 addressed this issue noting that “[w]hen building new renewable fuel infrastructure, we work with our customers and solicit their commitments to underwrite the investments,” but “[i]f a company has an advantageous RIN position, they may not be inclined to make a commitment for new infrastructure,” and that “limited commitments [from just some of their customers] generally won’t provide the justification for the project to proceed.”<sup>32</sup> Moreover, the parties that are structurally long on RINs are among the largest oil companies in the world. Aside from their interest in keeping RIN prices high to protect their profits from this program, it is in their interest to forestall the growing use of renewable fuels, which have the potential to displace large volumes of oil in the market over time, eroding their core business.

Second, under the current program structure, these parties also may not even have an incentive to blend to the blend wall. Because they have the RINs that they need to meet their own RVOs, and the availability of fewer RINs can keep RIN prices higher, generating fewer RINs could help them maximize their return on existing blending (E10) and, contrarily, have a direct disincentive to facilitate expansion of infrastructure and blending (B5, E85), because meeting the mandated level decreases RIN profits generated from being a RIN-long party. This is especially clear when the industry confronts the blend wall and additional capital or marketing is required to generate the RINs necessary to meet the RFS program’s goals of increasing renewable fuels consumption.

Though the number of companies that are RIN-long is relatively small, they are the companies that have the largest number of affiliated retail outlets in the nation. The four largest companies that are probably RIN-long have over 40,000 retail fueling stations, while nine companies that are probably RIN-short have about 30,000 retail fueling stations.<sup>33</sup> Accordingly, the disincentive for RIN-long companies to promote the blending of E85 for sale in their own affiliated fueling stations has a significant effect on the availability of E85 nationwide. Conversely, the RIN-short refiners supply fuels to the market, but market little, if any, fuel and therefore may lack access to, or control over, RIN generating blending infrastructure and may not participate in any significant way in blending of renewable fuels.

Ironically, the current structure, which puts the Point of Obligation on refiners instead of where the actual compliance is achieved at the point of blending, provides the least incentive to those who are best situated to undertake the blending that the RFS seeks to motivate, and imposes the greatest obligation on the parties who are most poorly situated to increase the volumes of renewable fuel that is blended into the fuel supply. Whether RIN-long refiners sell these RINs or bank them, these parties are not incentivized to invest significantly in biodiesel, advanced fuels, or E-85 infrastructure that would enable more renewable fuel to reach the market. They can remain relatively content to hold their long position. They are so competitively advantaged that they do not have to discount fuels to incentivize higher-level blends and thus protect their RIN windfall. In fact, they are actually incentivized to forestall more renewable fuel from entering the market, thus protecting hydrocarbon volumes being sold and keeping the RIN price as high as possible.

In the past, EPA had taken the view that parties facing growing costs for RINs would be incentivized to build new infrastructure or to invest in blending operations. To me, it was inappropriate to presume this as a path to compliance, as it was akin to telling a product's manufacturer that it also must become its distributor as part of an effort to sell a competing product. Effectively, that view essentially expected RIN pricing to become so severe that it would reverse the last 20 years of de-integration in the refinery industry. In the final rule establishing RVOs for 2014-16, EPA backed away from that position, stating that:

We do not believe the statute should be interpreted to require that refiners and importers change the nature of their businesses so as to comply with RFS requirements, as this would be a far-reaching result that Congress can be expected to have clearly specified if it was intended. For example, to the extent that commenters imply that refiners should be required to build or purchase renewable fuel production facilities, take ownership of retail stations, produce or sell cars capable of using high-ethanol blends, or plant cropland to provide feedstock for increased renewable fuel production, we would disagree. Rather, if other parties engaged in these activities fail to adjust those activities to allow the statutory volume targets to be met, we believe the result is an inadequate domestic supply.<sup>34</sup>

EPA continues to hold out hope that higher RIN prices will incentivize the consumption of more E85. In the final rule, EPA acknowledged, however, that:

[i]f higher RIN prices, which would likely result from a higher total renewable fuel standard, are to lead to substantial increases in E85 consumption, two independent events must occur. First, the higher RIN prices must lead to lower E85 retail prices. If this does not happen consumers would have no incentive to purchase additional volumes of E85 as a result of higher RIN prices. Second, FFV owners must respond to these lower prices by purchasing E85 instead of E10 when E85 is available. Authors such as Babcock and Pouliot, who have written about the ability for RINs to drive significant increases in E85

sales volumes, optimistically assume that RIN prices are passed through to E85 prices and that consumers are highly responsive to E85 prices.<sup>35</sup>

But as discussed above, EPA has acknowledged that a substantial portion of the value of the RIN is not being used to reduce the cost of E85 at the pump, with “only 44% of the RIN value [being] passed on to E85 customers in the form of lower E85 retail prices.”<sup>36</sup> EPA acknowledged that:

While economic theory . . . support[s] the idea that RINs can serve as a mechanism to increase the production, distribution, and consumption of renewable fuels, it is important to note that this result is dependent on the marketplace working both efficiently and quickly. In reality, there is a timing component associated with each of the steps outlined above. Renewable fuel producers and investors must see a sustained, profitable market for renewable fuels before they will be willing to invest in the construction of additional fuel production capacity, which may take years to construct and bring online. Fuel blenders and distributors must see sustained profit opportunities before they are willing to invest in new infrastructure to increase their capacity to blend and distribute renewable fuels. Market competition must increase before fuel blenders and distributors are willing to pass along all of the reduced effective price of renewable fuel (in essence, the value of RINs) to consumers at retail. New fueling infrastructure will need to be built to facilitate the growth in sales of fuels containing an increasing percentage of renewable fuel. And as exposure to renewable fuels increases, it will take some time for consumers to learn to identify value in fuel blends containing higher proportions of renewable fuels, as well as their vehicle’s ability to handle these fuel blends and where they are available for purchase.<sup>37</sup>

As noted above, the failure to pass through the value of the RIN to the retail price was observed by Knittel, et al., in their 2015 paper and by EPA in the 2014-2016 Final RVO rule. It also was recently reconfirmed in a new study that was presented to EPA<sup>38</sup> that will be submitted to this docket. Stock and Li examined the pass-through of wholesale prices to retail prices in the market for E85, examining a series of wholesale and retail E85 data from Minnesota. They concluded that statewide, about 75 percent of the value of the RIN is passed through to rack prices. Then, also statewide, about half of the value of the RIN that is passed through to the rack is subsequently passed through to the retail price. Overall, statewide, about 35 percent of the value of the RIN is passed all of the way though to the retail pump price. However, there is considerable heterogeneity, with effectively complete pass-through to retail in the Twin cities, where there is high station density and higher blends (and E100) available at the rack.<sup>39</sup>

Failure of the value of the RIN to pass through to the retail price of E85 contributes to the largest challenge in selling E85 at the moment, which is that it does not appear to provide good value for consumers. We can observe this by looking again at data reported by the State of Minnesota. Table 1 reports the monthly average price of E10 and E85 in Minnesota. When the price of E85 is adjusted to account for the fact that it contains, on average, about 25 percent less energy per gallon, the price often exceeds the price of gasoline, and did exceed it, on average, for 2015 and 2016, years that experienced high average RIN prices.<sup>40</sup> This demonstrates the challenge faced by the ethanol industry. With the a portion of the value of the RIN incorporated into the price of E85, E85 is still selling at a premium price over gasoline, and because of its lower energy content, consumers using E85 have to go to the service station one additional time each month to fill their fuel tanks, making it a less convenient fuel to use than E10.<sup>41</sup>

<sup>41</sup> Assumes that a car is driven 12,000 miles per year at 25 mpg using E10 or 18.75 mpg using E85, and purchases 15 gallons of fuel each trip to the service station.

Moreover, because Minnesota has more E85 stations than any other state, there is greater opportunity for E85 pump-on-pump competition in Minnesota than elsewhere. Pump-on-pump competition is important because that competition can drive down the price of E85 by incentivizing a more complete pass through of the value of the RIN to the retail pump, a point confirmed by Stock in finding near perfect pass through of the value of RINs to the retail pump price at E85 pumps in the Twin Cities metropolitan area that had a significantly high share of E85 pumps when compared to other parts of the state.<sup>42</sup> Other states, however, have fewer E85 pumps and less, if any, E85 pump-on-pump competition. For instance, in Maryland and Virginia and Washington DC, there are only 36 E85 stations, and only two zip codes in the two states and Washington DC have two E85 stations while none have more.<sup>43</sup> In those areas, E85 is not going to be priced competitively, providing consumers with poor value and little reason to purchase it. And if consumers are not going to purchase E85, then none of the things that EPA identified as necessary for RINs to serve as a mechanism to increase the production, distribution, and consumption of renewable fuels will occur and it will be nearly impossible for the RFS to meaningfully incentivize the purchase of E85 at the volumes required to meet the ever increasing requirements of the RFS.

Finally, EPA also needs to consider the operating and export incentives created with a high RIN price. If a refiner cannot generate RINs, the only options the RIN-short refiners have other than paying high RIN prices to RIN-long parties who are disincentivized to meet the mandated volumes -- are curtailing production or exporting. If they do either, the fuel supply in the United States shrinks, and there is both less competition for the advantaged refiners and less opportunity for renewable blending. It will make meeting the RVO targets that much more difficult and likely increase the domestic cost of the program without incentivizing the blending of renewable fuels.

Ironically, we need not wreak havoc to realign the incentives in the market. We need only place the obligation where it will evenly apply the burden and let the market work. If EPA moves the Point of Obligation to the owner of the hydrocarbon fuel just before blending, it will assure that every person controlling the blending will be fully incentivized to maximize the blending of renewable fuels into the fuel supply because they will need RINs in proportion to the fuel they can blend.

In the Proposed Denial of Petitions, EPA responded to Petitioners' arguments that moving the Point of Obligation from the refiner to the rack will increase the incentives for all obligated parties to promote blending by using their influence with their retail partners to increase the number of stations offering fuel blends such as E85 so that they can increase their access to the RINs needed for compliance with the RFS. In its response, EPA argued that changing the Point of Obligation would not increase the availability of fuel with higher blends of ethanol at the retail level.<sup>44</sup>

At the outset, EPA acknowledged that the Petitioners' arguments, many of which reflect the arguments that I summarized above, were "generally consistent with the principle that the closer the point of regulation is to the party whose behavior the regulation is intended to impact (in this case the retail station owner) the more effective the regulation is."<sup>45</sup> EPA then responded with two separate arguments. First, EPA noted that the Petitioners' arguments ignored the complicated relationships that exist in the fuels marketplace.<sup>46</sup> Second, EPA stated that the Petitioners' arguments ignored observations about the current marketers of E85.<sup>47</sup>

In each instance, EPA is incorrect. While there are undoubtedly complicated relationships in the fuels marketplace, EPA did not correctly identify the relationship that is most directly relevant to this issue. Moreover, while EPA argued that the Petitioners' arguments ignored observations about the current marketers of E85, EPA itself examined the wrong data. In doing so, EPA effectively decided to dismiss the sound economic arguments made by the Petitioners, myself, and others, based on a misunderstanding or misstatement of the relationships to which the Petitioners were referring, and its examination of the incorrect data.

If EPA had identified the correct relationship and examined the correct data, it would have concluded that moving the Point of Obligation would facilitate the sale of E85 at more retail fueling stations than under the current program structure.

A. The Relationship that Most Clearly Affects the Retail Availability of E85 is Whether the Obligated Party is Short RINs

EPA stated that the Petitioners' arguments ignored complicated relationships in the fuels marketplace. EPA's argument, however, misstates the petitioners' argument and misses the petitioners' point. EPA's entire discussion of the "complicated relationship" is reproduced here:

Currently less than 0.5% of all fueling stations are owned by a major oil company, while approximately 50% are branded stations, selling fuel under the brand of a refiner. It is unlikely that blenders and position holders would be more effective at encouraging retail stations to offer E85 than the refiners and importers of gasoline and diesel fuel who are affiliated with these stations. This is especially true for the nearly 60% of retail stations owned by single-store owners who are likely to face difficulties raising the capital required to install the equipment necessary to enable the sale of these fuels.<sup>48</sup>

The Petitioners are making an economic argument about the relationship between an obligated party's obligation and the incentive that that obligation creates for the obligated party to sell more E85. In the Proposed Notice of Denial, EPA framed the Petitioners' position to be that shifting the compliance obligation to "refiners and importers of gasoline and diesel fuel" to "blenders and position holders" will create incentives that will result in more stations selling E85.<sup>49</sup> That, however, is not the Petitioners' point.

The entity in the supply chain that is best situated to encourage retail outlets to sell E85 is the entity that has long-term supply agreements with retail fueling stations, because the wholesale seller can set terms of sale that can be used to promote the retail sale of E85. In some situations that entity is a refiner. However, even when a refiner sells fuel to a retail fueling station, it also is likely the blender or position holder, selling fuel that it refined, transported, and blended to its affiliated retail fueling stations. In other instances, a refiner may have a retail brand through which it sells more fuel than it refines, and purchases fuel from other refineries to resell to its retail partners. Retail outlets may, however, purchase fuel from a blender or position holder that is not also a refiner. Whether the retail outlet is purchasing fuel from a refiner or not is not important with respect to the seller's ability to affect the availability of E85. What matters is the seller's ability to establish terms of sale that can encourage retail outlets to sell E85.

EPA stated that "[i]t is unlikely that blenders and position holders would be more effective at encouraging retail stations to offer E85 than the refiners and importers of gasoline and diesel fuel who are affiliated with these stations." It is not exactly clear what EPA is arguing in this sentence, and EPA may be conflating two points to support its position. It may be implying that refiners are large, and therefore have an enhanced ability to encourage retail stations to offer E85. If EPA is making that argument, I disagree with it. Whether or not it is making that argument, however, it seems to clearly be arguing that the party that "would be more effective at encouraging retail stations to offer E85" is the party that is "affiliated with these stations." Presumably the reason that the affiliation matters is because it reflects the fact that the affiliated party is selling fuel to the retail fueling station and can set the terms and conditions of the sale of fuel in a manner that could either undermine or promote the sale of E85. That argument makes sense, so long as the affiliated party, who is selling fuel to the retail fueling station, has its own incentive to facilitate the sale of E85. The Petitioners are arguing that with the Point of Obligation at the refinery, several of the parties that are "affiliated with these stations" do not have proper incentives to facilitate the sale of E85.

Consistent with that argument, the Petitioners' request is not intended to simply shift the compliance obligation from refiners (who are currently obligated parties, and will remain obligated parties because nearly every single refiner also blends some quantities of fuel for wholesale sale), to blenders and position holders, many of whom are also refiners. Rather, as explained below, the Petitioner's request to move the Point of Obligation is intended to eliminate the different incentives for 1) obligated parties (refiners) that are structurally long RINs, 2) obligated parties (refiners) that are structurally short RINs, and 3) unobligated blenders that are by definition long RINs, so that all wholesale providers of fuel have the same incentive to promote the sale of E85 and other higher blends of ethanol.

In the context of the RFS program as currently structured, an obligated party is structurally RIN-short if it is nearly inevitable, given the manner in which its business is structured, that its routine operations will not generate enough separated RINs to meet its blending obligation. A party is likely to find itself structurally short if it is either a refiner or an importer that refines or imports more fuel than is sold at retail outlets by parties with which it has a contractual relationship to supply fuel. Merchant refiners, for example, are often structurally short because they are not associated with retail brands, and therefore do not have long-term contractual relationships to sell the fuel they refine to a set group of retail stations.

In contrast, an obligated party is structurally RIN-long if it is nearly inevitable, given the manner in which its business is structured, that its routine operations will separate more RINs than it needs to meet its compliance obligation. A party is likely to find itself structurally long if it is a refiner with a retail brand and more fuel is sold at the retail outlets with which it is affiliated than it refines. Several of the large integrated oil companies with large, well-known retail brands are structurally long because the branded retail outlets with which they are associated, and with which they have long-term contractual relationships to sell the fuel they refine to, sell more fuel than the oil company refines.

As explained earlier, a company that is structurally RIN-short does not separate enough RINs to meet its RVOs because it blends less fuel than it refines, if it blends any fuel at all. Such companies have an incentive to blend more E85. However, because RIN-short obligated parties do not have a long-term contractual relationship with a sufficiently large group of retail stations, it is difficult to incentivize the sale of E85 to their customers in a manner that would encourage their customers to make the investments required to sell E85.

In contrast, a company that is structurally long on RINs easily separates more RINs than it needs to meet its RVOs because it blends more fuel than it refines. Companies that are structurally RIN-long not only separate all of the RINs they need to meet their RVOs, they also often separate excess RINs that they can sell to obligated parties that are short RINs. Because they are sellers in the constrained RINs market, it is in their interest that the RIN market remains tight so that the price at which they can sell their excess RINs remains high, as explained earlier in Section IV. Accordingly, they not only have a disincentive to blend, but they have an incentive to make it more difficult for other parties to blend in order to keep the RIN market tight and RIN prices high. Moreover, as noted above, as the companies that are structurally long are all large oil companies, it is not in their interest to facilitate the use of renewable fuels that could cannibalize the sale of oil.

The Petitioners are not arguing that moving the Point of Obligation from 1) refiners and importers, who are currently obligated parties to 2) blenders and position holders, will increase the incentives for fueling stations to sell E85. Rather, the Petitioner's are arguing that in moving the Point of Obligation to the rack, a point in the supply chain where most blending actually occurs, EPA would be aligning the incentives to blend by making all parties structurally RIN-short and similarly situated. This will increase the incentives for all fueling stations to sell E85.

B. Observations of Current Marketers of E85 Demonstrates that Moving the Point of Obligation Will Increase the Number of Retail Outlets Selling E85

After concluding that it was unlikely that “blenders and position holders would be more effective at encouraging retail stations to offer E85 than the refiners and importers of gasoline and diesel fuel who are affiliated with these stations,”<sup>50</sup> EPA stated that the Petitioners’ arguments ignore “observations from the current marketers of E85.”<sup>51</sup> EPA then presented quantitative evidence that “appear[s] to contradict claims that moving the point of obligation in the RFS program would result in a greater number of stations selling fuels with higher levels of renewable fuel, such as E85.”<sup>52</sup>

EPA, however, did not ask the correct question when examining the data. Had EPA undertaken the correct analysis, it would easily observe that if obligated parties are RIN-short, their affiliated stations are more likely to sell E85 than if obligated parties are RIN-long, and that moving the Point of Obligation to make all parties RIN-short would increase the number of stations that sell E-85.

EPA’s Analysis: EPA examined the affiliations of approximately 3,100 fueling stations in the United States that sold E85 at the end of 2015. EPA concluded that while 50 percent of all fueling stations were branded, which it defined as affiliated with a refiner, only 24 percent of fueling stations that sold E85 were branded. Moreover, it found that while 50 percent of fueling stations were unbranded, they represented 66 percent of fueling stations with E85.<sup>53</sup> Based on this data, EPA concluded that “[a]n unbranded station is therefore approximately 3 times more likely to offer E85 for sale than a branded station (Unbranded stations are approximately 2.5 times more likely to offer E85 than branded stations if we exclude consideration of private stations).”<sup>54</sup> This demonstrates, EPA argues, that petitioners are incorrect in “claim[ing] that such a change would result in an increasing number of retail stations offering E85 for sale.”<sup>55</sup>

EPA undertook the incorrect analysis.

The Petitioners were not arguing that EPA should shift the Point of Obligation from unbranded stations (stations that are not affiliated with a refiner) to branded stations (stations that are affiliated with a refiner). Therefore, comparing the rates of E85 availability at branded and unbranded stations is incorrect. Instead, the Petitioners are arguing that in moving the Point of Obligation from the refinery to the rack, EPA would be shifting from a structure where some obligated parties were structurally long while others were structurally short, to a structure where all parties are structurally short (except to the extent that they blend and sell fuel that contains more than 10 percent ethanol (e.g., E15 or E85). That means that every obligated party would have the exact same incentive to blend ethanol into the fuel supply. Accordingly, what EPA should have examined is whether fueling stations affiliated with obligated parties that are structurally short RINs carry E85 at a higher rate than fueling stations affiliated with obligated parties that are structurally long RINs.

Most importantly, the same data that EPA itself examined clearly supports the proposition that fueling stations affiliated with obligated parties that are RIN-short are more likely to sell E85 than fueling stations affiliated with obligated parties that are RIN-long.

Summary of Data: This analysis is based on a list of fueling stations downloaded from the Alternative Fuels Data Center at the Department of Energy,<sup>56</sup> the same data source that EPA used in its analysis.<sup>57</sup> The AFDC database identified 3,194 fueling stations that sell E85. From that list, I excluded 23 fueling stations that were identified as either planned or unavailable, and 323 fueling stations that were identified as private.<sup>58</sup> This left a total of 2,848 fueling stations.

Categorization of Fueling Stations: Of the 2,848 fueling stations remaining in the dataset, I was able to assign all but 94 fueling stations to a brand. If the brand was directly affiliated with a refiner, I treated the brand and its fueling stations as affiliated with that refiner. If the brand was owned by a company that also owns a refinery, I also treated it as affiliated with that refiner.<sup>59</sup> A detailed explanation of how I assigned fueling stations to a brand is attached to these comments at Appendix 1. I was able to affiliate 2,754 stations with a brand. Of those fueling stations, 1,254 are associated with obligated parties and 1,500 are not associated with obligated parties, and of those associated with obligated parties, 368 were associated with parties that I believe to be long RINs, and 882 are associated with parties that I believe to be short RINs. A list of the 2,754 fueling stations that I assigned to a brand is attached to these comments at Appendix 5. A list of the fueling stations that I identified either as planned, unavailable, or private, and the stations that I was unable to affiliate with a brand is attached to these comments at Appendix 5.

<sup>58</sup> I excluded private stations because they are generally owned by governments, universities, or other public entities, and their motivation for using E85 is different than the general public's motivations. Many of those entities use E85 in response to government mandates to use alternative fuels.

<sup>59</sup> For example, I treated the SuperAmerica brand as affiliated with Western Refining because it owns that brand. See About Western Refining, available at <http://www.wnr.com/about-us>.

Identifying Number of Fueling Stations by Brand: After assigning each fueling station to a brand, I determined how many fueling stations sell fuel (not just E85) under each brand's name. For the purpose of this exercise I used the same data that EPA used in its analysis.<sup>60</sup> For companies that did not appear on that list of service stations that EPA used, I first looked to the company's annual report, if available and it stated the number of fueling stations affiliated with the brand. I then looked to its own web site if the annual report did not contain this information. This approach allowed me to use a single source, the exact same source that EPA used in its Notice, for as many companies as possible, and to fill in data only where that primary source did not report data. By dividing the number of stations affiliated with each brand that sold E85 by the total number of fueling stations affiliated with each brand, I could determine what percentage of all fueling stations affiliated with each brand sell E85.

Determining Whether Obligated Parties Are Long or Short: There is no definitive source that identifies which obligated parties are short RINs and which obligated parties are long RINs. While I cannot make definitive statements about who is long and who is short RINs, I looked to several sources to see what information is publicly available about obligated parties' RIN obligations. First, I looked to information published by the Lundberg Letter. In August, 2015, the newsletter published a chart, reproduced in Figure 4 below, that depicted estimated branded gasoline sales as a percentage of refining production by company. Companies that sell more branded gasoline than they produce are likely to be RIN-long, and those that sell less branded gasoline than they produce are likely to be RIN-short. The Lundberg figure suggests that BP, Shell and Chevron are likely to be long RINs, and ExxonMobil, Citgo, Marathon, Tesoro, Phillips 66 and Valero are likely to be short RINs.

Baker & O'Brien, an energy consultancy, published its own estimate of Obligated Parties' estimated gasoline and diesel production (which establishes their RVOs) and their potential retail sales volumes (which estimates their capacity to separate RINs by blending fuel that they sell to affiliated retail fueling stations), which is reproduced in Figure 5.<sup>61</sup> Their chart suggests that BP, Shell, Chevron, and CITGO could be comfortably long RINs, and that ExxonMobil could be close to balanced. It also suggests that Valero, Phillips 66, Marathon, Tesoro, and Delek are likely to be short RINs. It is important to note that the Baker & O'Brien analysis estimates a brand's potential retail sales volume, but not purport to reflect their actual sales volumes.

Annual reports for Marathon, CENEX, Western, MAPCO, and Valero all indicate that they are RIN-short. Relevant excerpts are included in Appendix 7. In recent Congressional testimony, a senior executive from CountryMark stated that it is short RINs.<sup>63</sup>

In a 2013 earning phone call, David Rosenthal, Vice President of Investor Relations & Secretary for ExxonMobil stated that the RFS had little effect on the company's financial performance. He said that "[w]e are a net purchaser of RINs, but . . . are pretty well balanced. We do generate the majority of our credits by blending our biofuels directly. . . . it's not real significant."<sup>64</sup> When asked if the cost of RINs had any material impact on ExxonMobil's financial performance, he replied, “No, not at all.”<sup>65</sup> Since then, two market observers reached different conclusions, though they both indicated that Exxon was close to balanced; in August, 2015, Lundberg concluded that ExxonMobil was RIN-short, while Baker & O’Brien concluded that ExxonMobil might be slightly RIN-long based on year-end 2015 data. Moreover, in 2016, ExxonMobil sold two refineries, which has reduced its RVO. For the purpose of this analysis, I will treat ExxonMobil as being RIN-long, though it is possible that it is slightly RIN-short.

Sinclair is privately held and I could not identify any public statements that suggest whether it is short or long RINs. It did, however, sue EPA to receive a small refiner’s exemption from the RFS.<sup>66</sup> One may surmise from that lawsuit that it is RIN-short, because it would be unlikely to seek exemption from the program if the company was RIN-long and therefore generating revenue from the program. Determining Citgo’s status is also challenging. Lundberg estimated that Citgo was RIN-short, while Baker & O’Brien concluded that it has the retail capacity to be RIN-long. Anecdotal evidence indicates that Citgo is losing retail outlets in response to consumer preference not to purchase gasoline from a Venezuelan state-owned company, which would increase the likelihood that it is RIN-short. For the purpose of this exercise, I will treat it as RIN-short primarily because it seems plausible, and it slightly undermines my argument. As indicated in Figure 6 below, if Citgo was RIN-long, then every company that was RIN-long would have E-85 at a smaller percentage of its affiliated stations than every company that is RIN-short. By treating Citgo as RIN-short, I am being conservative. If I am wrong, correcting my error actually strengthens my argument.

There appears to be a general consensus on which companies are long and short RINs, as summarized in Table 3 below. For most companies, I identified either a statement from the company itself or two estimates from market observers that are consistent with each other. As discussed above, I am less certain about ExxonMobil and Citgo, but for the purpose of this analysis and treating ExxonMobil as RIN-long and Citgo as RIN-short.

Analysis: The Petitioners are requesting that the Point of Obligation be moved from the refinery to the rack because doing so will assign the obligation to blend renewable fuel into the fuel supply to the party that actually blends renewable fuel into the fuel supply. As explained above, in doing so, the new Point of Obligation would make all obligated parties structurally short when the RVO is above the blend wall.

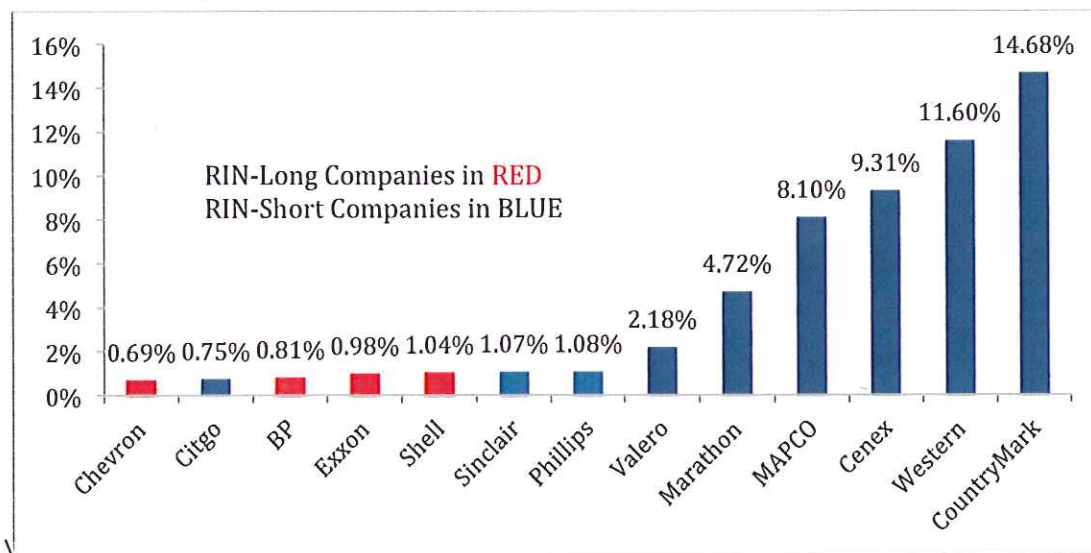

The data demonstrates clearly that stations affiliated with obligated parties that are structurally short RINs are more likely to sell E85 than stations affiliated with obligated parties that are structurally long RINs. By assigning every fueling station to a brand, if applicable, and then identifying those stations that are affiliated with brands that are RIN-short and those that are RIN-long, we can determine whether an obligated party's ability to separate all of the RINs it needs to meet its RVOs is reflected in the number of affiliated fueling stations that sell E85. The graph in Figure 6 shows the percentage of stations affiliated with each brand that sells E85. The eight brands for which the highest percentage of affiliated fueling stations sell E85 are all obligated parties that are structurally short RINs. The four companies that are RIN-long are all among the five companies with the lowest percentage of affiliated fueling stations selling E85. As noted above, if I am wrong about Citgo, and it is in fact RIN-long, then every company that was RIN-long would have E-85 at a smaller percentage of its affiliated stations than every company that is RIN-short.

This data clearly and unambiguously demonstrates that retail fueling stations affiliated with obligated parties that are RIN-short are more likely to sell E85 than retail fueling stations affiliated with obligated parties that are RIN-long, and that moving the Point of Obligation will promote the addition of E85 to more retail fueling stations. This conclusion is "consistent with the principle that the closer the point of regulation is to the party whose behavior the regulation is intended to impact (in this case the retail station owner) the more effective the regulation is,"<sup>67</sup> and sharply contrasts with EPA's conclusion that changing the Point of Obligation would not increase the number of stations that sell E85. If the RVOs established by EPA effectively require that ethanol constitute more than 10 percent of the fuel supply, then every party will be RIN-short except to the extent that they blend and sell fuel that contains more than 10 percent ethanol (e.g., E15 or E85). That means that every obligated party would have the exact same incentive to blend more ethanol as fueling stations affiliated with obligated parties that currently are RIN-short. By moving the Point of Obligation to the terminal rack, and making every obligated party RIN-short, you will ensure that every obligated party has the same incentive to blend E85, and to make it available for retail sale at their affiliated retail fueling stations, including parties that are now RIN-long, and which have the largest networks of affiliated retail fueling stations in the nation.

C. RIN-Short Obligated Parties Are More Likely to Build New E85 Pumps

In addition to examining the extent to which retail fueling stations affiliated with obligated parties that are RIN-short and RIN-long currently sell E85, I examined the affiliation of fueling stations that have started selling E85 since January 1, 2013. As noted above, the real test of the program’s functionality began in late 2012 and early 2013 when the market realized that the nation’s fuel supply would have difficulty absorbing the volumes of ethanol required by the RFS, and RINs prices started rising. I examined the data to see whether there was any pattern in the construction of new E85 pumps that might inform the current proceeding.

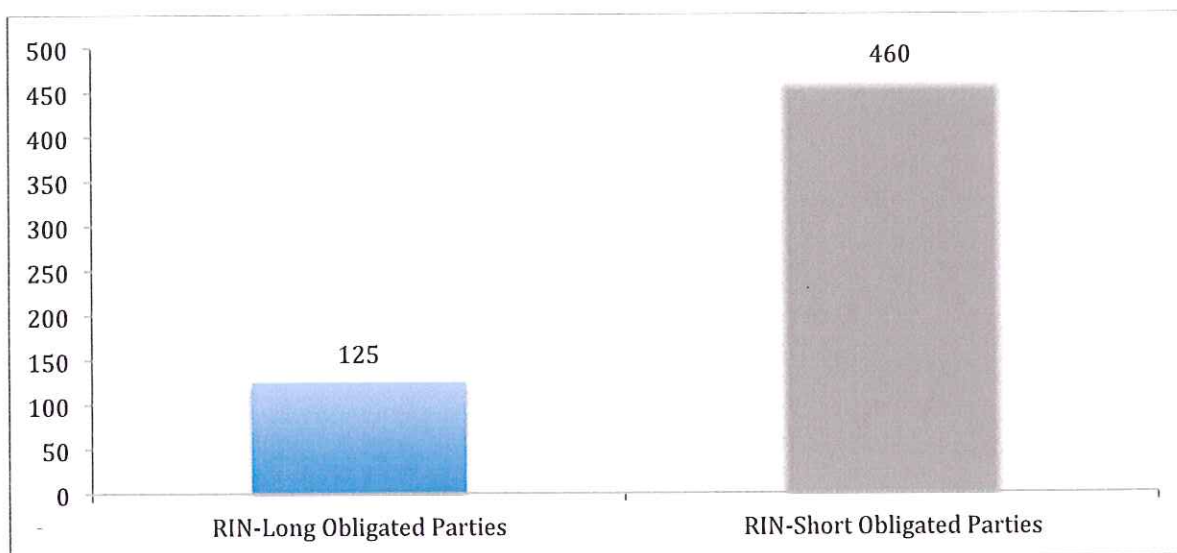

Of the 2,754 fueling stations that I examined, 585 of the fueling stations are affiliated with obligated parties and added their E85 pumps since January 1, 2013.<sup>68</sup> This represents 21 percent of all stations in the sample. Of these stations with new E85 pumps, 460 are affiliated with RIN-short parties and only 125 are affiliated with RIN-long parties, as depicted in Figure 7.<sup>69</sup>

Moreover, the RIN-short parties' affiliates operate about 31,000 stations while the RIN-long parties' affiliates operate about 41,000 stations,<sup>70</sup> meaning that RIN-short parties' affiliates have added E85 pumps at about 1.5 percent of their stations while the RIN-long parties' affiliates have added E85 pumps at only about 0.3 percent of their stations.

Once again, the market has responded in a manner that is “generally consistent with the principle that the closer the point of regulation is to the party whose behavior the regulation is intended to impact . . . the more effective the regulation is.”<sup>71</sup> When the establishment of an RVO exceeding the blend wall placed a compliance obligation on RIN-short obligated parties, who could not do their own blending through their routine operations but were affiliated with retail fueling stations, they increased the RINs they could separate by facilitating the construction of more E85 pumps. In contrast, when the exact same RVOs did not impose an incremental compliance obligation on RIN-long parties, because they could do their own blending through their routine operations, they had little additional incentive to facilitate the construction of new E85 pumps and did so at a far lower rate than RIN-short obligated parties.

Moving the Point of Obligation from the refinery to the distribution rack will align every obligated party's incentive to blend, and so long as the RVOs are above the blend wall, will lead to the construction of more E85 pumps, greater availability of E85, and the opportunity to blend more renewable fuel into the fuel supply.

My review of the data not only demonstrates that RIN-short obligated parties are more likely to have E85 available at their affiliated retail fueling stations today, and to have built more new E85 fueling stations since January, 2013 -- when the market first began to appreciate the challenges of meeting the RVOs established by the RFS -- it also demonstrates that EPA's characterization of the data in the Proposed Notice of Denial vastly overstated the point it was trying to make, even as it was making the wrong point.

As explained above, EPA argued that fueling stations that were not affiliated with refiners were three times as likely to sell E85 as fueling stations that were affiliated with refiners.<sup>72</sup> In its analysis, however, it misidentified many stations that were affiliated with refiners as unaffiliated. In doing so, EPA understated the extent to which stations affiliated with refiners sell E85. For instance, the Corner Store brand was formerly owned by Valero, and each of the stations that carry E85 are still affiliated with, and purchase their fuel from, Valero. EPA, however, treated those stations as "unbranded," meaning unaffiliated with a refiner.<sup>73</sup> Likewise, EPA treated the SuperAmerica brand as unaffiliated,<sup>74</sup> even though it is owned by Western Refining,<sup>75</sup> and treated the CENEX brand as unaffiliated,<sup>76</sup> even though it is owned by CHS.<sup>77</sup> Once the list of fueling stations carrying E85 is corrected to reflect their affiliations, EPA's point is far less persuasive.

In the Proposed Notice of Denial, EPA stated that 24 percent of stations with E85 were affiliated with refiners and 66 percent of stations with E85 were not affiliated with refiners.<sup>78</sup> Once I reviewed the list of stations and updated the information about their affiliation with obligated parties, the observation was different. Of the 2,754 publicly available fueling stations whose brand affiliation, or absence of brand affiliation, I confirmed, 1,254 (46 percent of the total) are affiliated with a refiner, and 1,500 (54 percent of the total) are not affiliated with a refiner. This represents a significant difference from the data that EPA relied on when it issued the Proposed Notice of Denial.

E. Retail Fueling Stations Affiliated With RIN-Long Parties Are Likely Selling E85 at Higher Prices and in Lower Volumes Than Stations Affiliated With RIN-Short Parties

EPA's analysis and my analysis have focused on examining the number of stations, and their relationship with the fuel suppliers, and whether that supplier was RIN-long, RIN-short, or unobligated. We have undertaken this analysis because it is the best analysis we can do given the data that is available, all of which is information about the availability of E85 at fueling stations. Unfortunately, there is no good data available about the volume of E85 fuel sold and whether the volumes sold by retail fueling stations differ based on whether the station's fuel supplier is RIN-long, RIN-short, or unobligated.

As discussed above, it is clear that the value of the RIN is not being passed through to the retail pump in most circumstances. This is a problem because while we have paid substantial attention to the number of stations selling E85, we have no data about the volume of E85 being sold and by whom it is being sold. We know that parties that are RIN-short have a strong incentive to sell as much E85 as possible, because they need RINs for compliance. We also know, as explained above in Section IV, and as the data presented above in Section V.B demonstrates, that parties that are RIN-long often have little incentive to sell more E85, and it is likely in their interest not to sell it at all. We could certainly imagine that retailers who are affiliated with RIN-long suppliers would have little incentive to forego greater profits in an effort to increase E85 sales volumes, undermining the ability of the RFS to increase the volumes of renewable fuel sold to drivers. For example, if an E85 retailer can purchase E85 for $1.00 less per gallon than E10, he can generate a $0.60/gallon profit by selling E85 at a $0.40 discount to E10. If that retailer could sell 1,000 gallons a week of E85 this price, he would make a profit of $600 per week on E85 sales.<sup>79</sup> If this same retailer could increase E85 sales from 1,000 gallons a week to 2,000 gallons a week by offering E85 at a $0.90/gal discount relative to E10, his E85 sales would have doubled, but his profits would have declined to $0.10 per gallon or just $200 per week.<sup>80</sup> If the retailer can generate more profit by selling a lower volume and the fuel supplier has no need for RINs because they are structurally RIN-long, the retailer will have no reason to increase the volume of E85 sales.

Because detailed price data has not been collected, we cannot examine the prices at which different types of fueling stations sell E85. I am confident, however, that if the data existed, we would find that retail fueling stations that are affiliated with suppliers who are RIN-short sell greater volumes of E85, and sell it at a lower price, than retail fueling stations that are affiliated with suppliers who are RIN-long. I would encourage EPA to work with the Energy Information Administration to undertake additional data collection so that we can measure the effectiveness of this program.

VI. ADMINISTRATION OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE BIOFUELS INFRASTRUCTURE PARTNERSHIP

There is general agreement that people are more likely to buy E85 if it is priced competitively relative to E10 and less likely to buy it if it is more expensive than E10 on an energy content adjusted basis. In December, 2014, I participated in an interagency meeting to address how to move forward after EPA decided to withdraw from regulatory review at the Office of Management and Budget its draft final rule establishing RVOs for 2014. The discussion focused on what the government could do to support renewable fuels that would supplement the RFS. I hypothesized that retailers were more interested in selling lower volumes of E85 at a higher price to those drivers who perceived it to be a premium product, but that we needed to lower the price to sell the volumes required to meet the RFS requirements.

I was already advocating that EPA move the Point of Obligation to promote the installation of E85 pumps at more fueling stations. I wanted to build on that proposal with an initiative to create more retail level competition with the hope that it could reduce the price of E85 at the pump and increase sales volumes. To that end, I proposed a grant program that would select up to three communities with the goal being that between 20 and 25 percent of all fueling stations in these communities sell E85. By promoting retail level E85 price competition between fueling stations, the price might fall and sales volumes might grow. A new paper by Stock and Li has supported my hypothesis. They examined station level data in Minnesota and found that RIN pass-through “is higher if there are more local stations that sell E85,” and that “the entry of a nearby station into the E85 market reduces the markup on E85 charged by an E85 retailer.”<sup>81</sup> Specifically, they observed that “[h]aving more local E85 stations increases competition and is associated with higher pass-through,” and that “[i]n the Twin Cities metro area, an area of relatively high E85 station density, we find essentially complete pass-through of the E85-E10 wholesale price discount at the rack to retail prices. Outside the Twin Cities, slightly less than half the E85-E10 wholesale price discount is passed along to consumers.”<sup>82</sup>

In June, 2015, USDA announced the creation of the Biofuel Infrastructure Partnership, which would make grants available to support the installation of fueling infrastructure for E85 and other blends containing more than 10 percent ethanol.<sup>83</sup> Unfortunately, when the USDA grants were announced in October, 2015, it was clear that the implementation of the program was not consistent with the program that I conceived.<sup>84</sup> The USDA grant funds were distributed among 21 states, and in no state was the grant program large enough to get sufficient E85 pumps into a community to reduce the local market power that E85 retailers frequently have today.<sup>85</sup> In fact, one state committed to installing just seven pumps, and several committed to installing fewer than 25 pumps.<sup>86</sup> It appears that USDA was more interested in making grants to as many states and communities as possible rather than addressing the specific issue that the program was intended to address. This initiative was, and if properly implemented remains, a strong complement to moving the Point of Obligation. I strongly recommend that EPA work to support such a program within the Administration in order to improve our overall approach to renewable fuels.

Under the current program structure, there is a misalignment between the parties obligated to ensure that blending occurs and the parties that are situated in the supply chain to blend. As EPA recognized in 2009,<sup>87</sup> moving the Point of Obligation can better align the obligation and the ability to blend. If every party that controls blending at the rack becomes an obligated party, every obligated party will start RIN-short and will have an incentive to promote the retail sale of E85. Moreover, moving the Point of Obligation will more evenly distribute the cost of obligation across the obligated parties and will likely reduce the cost of the program to consumers. Rather than incentivizing major obligated parties to hoard RINs and withhold from infrastructure investments, obligated parties would be able to compete on an even playing field as the RFS drafters envisioned. With all of the major parties competing for E85 market share, retail E85 prices have the best opportunity to be competitive with E10 and better penetrate the market for fuel for flexible fuel vehicles.

As the data that I examined and discussed in this paper demonstrate, this is not merely a matter of economic theory that fails to translate in the real world because of the complexities of the market. The data demonstrates that aligning the interests of all obligated parties is the best way to increase the retail availability of E85. The retail affiliates of parties that are RIN-short have E85 available at a higher percentage of their retail fueling stations and have opened substantially more E85 pumps since 2013 than the retail affiliates of parties that are RIN-long. While there are many things that need to occur for the driving public to purchase more E85, making it available at more retail fueling stations is a critical part of the process.

While moving the Point of Obligation is not an entire solution to the challenge posed by the blend wall, it will make a substantial contribution towards facilitating the market's ability to absorb the growing quantities of ethanol that the RFS calls for over the next several years. Ultimately, this represents the best chance for policymakers to get past the difficult problems presented by the blend wall and to achieve the fundamental goal of the program—getting more renewable fuel into the market.

Methodology to Determine Brand of Fuel Sold at E85 Fueling Stations

The Question

- In concluding that the point of obligation should not be moved, EPA stated that “while 50% of all retail fuel stations are branded (affiliated with a refiner), only 24% of all stations that sell E85 are branded stations. While large retail chains often directly own retail stations, thus giving them control of the fuel offerings at the stations they own, the fact that a significantly higher proportion of these stations offer E85 relative to branded stations suggests that the current point of obligation provides significant incentives for these stations to offer E85 under the right market conditions.”
- EPA asked the wrong question.
  - The issue is not branded versus non-branded.
  - The proper question is obligated long versus obligated short.

The List of Stations

- To challenge EPA’s analysis, I needed to examine what types of stations are selling E85.
- The AFDC at the Department of Energy maintains a list of fueling stations that have an E85 pump. EPA used this data for its analysis of in pages 34 -36 of the notice.
- I downloaded the current list of E85 fueling stations from the AFDC on December 20, 2016. I then downloaded the list again on February 16 and added to the original list stations that had been added since December 20, 2016.
- The list contained a total of 3194 fueling stations. Of those stations:
  - 2754 were identified as open and available to the public
  - 9 were identified as planned
  - 14 were identified as not currently available
  - 313 were identified as private
- I excluded from the analysis all stations that were not open and available to the public.
  - I excluded private stations because they were often owned by governments, universities, or other public entities, and their motivation for using E85 is different than the general public’s motivations. Many of those entities have government mandates to use alternative fuels. Fewer than five of the stations were branded.
- This left a total of 2754 fueling stations.

Identifying Station Affiliations

- I assigned as many stations as possible to a “brand.”
  - I used a filter to identify stations whose name included the name of a brand, such as BP, Chevron, Shell, Exxon, Mobil, Marathon, Conoco, etc.
  - I was able to affiliate 2060 stations with a brand that had at least five stations.
- If the brand was directly affiliated with a refiner, I treated the brand and its fueling stations as affiliated. If the brand is owned by a company that also owns a refinery, I treated it as affiliated.
- Some convenience stores sometimes sell fuel under their own brand, some sell under the brand that is affiliated with a refiner, and some may sell under either their brand or another brand (e.g., a Circle K convenience store may sell fuel under another brand). If the convenience store brand had more than 5 stations, but its affiliation with an obligated party was not clear, I took the following steps.

- I examined the fueling station affiliation of every 5th station, based on the order that the stations appeared in the DOE list.
  - If every station that I selected sold gas under the same brand, and the brand was not an obligated party, I treated all stations with that name as being affiliated with the brand belonging to the non-obligated party (e.g., Sheetz, Kum & Go).
  - If any convenience store in the sample that I selected sold fuel under a different brand, I examined every fueling station from that brand of convenience store to determine which brand of fuel it sold (e.g., Circle K sells fuel under other brands at some stations).
- For the 625 stations whose name did not indicate a brand or common ownership, I looked to see if the station had a brand affiliation by looking at a picture of the station using Google Earth.
    - This allowed me to assign a brand to 531 of the 625 stations.
    - There were 94 stations remaining that I could find on Google Earth and could not affiliate with a brand. I treated them as missing data.
  - As a result of this review, I associated identified 1254 stations associated with obligated parties, and 1500 stations associated with non-obligated parties or not associated with any party.
  - Of those associated with obligated parties, 368 were associated with parties that I believe to be long, and 886 are associated with parties that I believe to be short.

Number of Service Stations

- I also need to know how many stations sell fuel under each brand.
- There is no definitive list or source of this information. One can certainly understand that the number changes as many stations are small businesses and certainly many service stations open and close each month.
- I started by using the same data that EPA used in its analysis: NACS data from 2013.
- For companies that did not appear on that list, I first looked to the company's annual report, if available and it contained a number, I then looked to its own web site.
- This approach allowed me to use a single source, the exact same source that EPA used, for as many companies as possible, and to fill in data only where the source did not report data.

I used the same source that EPA used in its analysis to determine the number of fueling stations affiliated with each obligated party.<sup>4</sup> For companies that did not appear on that list of service stations that EPA used, I looked to the company's annual report, if available and it stated the number of fueling stations affiliated with the brand. For CountryMark, I found the data in Congressional testimony of a CountryMark executive about the RFS to the Subcommittee on Oversight of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology of the House of Representatives. This approach allowed me to use a single source, the same source that EPA used, for as many companies as possible, and to fill in data only where that primary source did not report data. In each instance where filled in data, I obtained the number directly from a company source.

Calculation of Percentage of Stations Per Brand That Sell E85

	Number of Stations That Sell E85	Total Number of Stations	Percent of Stations That Sell E85
Tesoro	13	2,400	0.5417%
Chevron	55	8,000	0.6875%
Citgo	44	5,900	0.7458%
BP	92	11,300	0.8142%
Exxon	76	7,753	0.9803%
Shell	145	14,000	1.0357%
Sinclair	29	2,700	1.0741%
Phillips	74	6,875	1.0764%
Valero	109	5,000	2.1800%
Marathon	367	7,777	4.7190%
MAPCO	29	358	8.1006%
Cenex	149	1,600	9.3125%
Western	63	543	11.6022%
CountryMark	16	109	14.6789%

The data reporting the number of stations selling E85 is compiled from the data in Appendix 5. The sole exception is the number of CountryMark stations that sell E85. While preparing these comments, I read testimony of a senior CountryMark executive about the RFS before Subcommittee on Oversight of the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology of the House of Representatives. In the testimony, the executive stated that CountryMark had 109 stations, of which 16 carried E85.<sup>1</sup> I found this data by happenstance, but afterwards looked, and did not find any other party reporting the number of affiliated stations that sold E85.

The data reporting the total number of stations selling fuel by brand is reported in Appendix 2.

The list of companies selected was drawn from the list of stations selling E85 reported by EPA in this docket. I have added Cenex to the list, because the brand is owned by CHS Inc., a refiner and obligated party. Although I have included Tesoro on this list, I excluded it from Figure 6 of my comments. Unique among refineries with retail brands, Tesoro notes that its retail-marketing system includes more than 2,400 retail stations in 16 states under the ARCO, Shell, Exxon, Mobil, USA Gasoline, Rebel and Tesoro brands. Tesoro wholly owns the Tesoro, ARCO and USA Gasoline brands. Through acquisitions and partnerships, it has secured limited rights to utilize the Shell, Exxon and Mobil brands at retail stations in specific geographic areas.<sup>2</sup> Because of its strategy of selling fuel under other companies' brands, if I report only the number of Tesoro branded stations as being affiliated with Tesoro I likely would underreport the number of stations.

Table of Contents

Refinery direct operating costs decreased $1.40 per barrel in 2015 compared to 2014 and increased $1.37 per barrel in 2014 compared to 2013, which include a decrease in planned turnaround and major maintenance costs of $0.67 per barrel and an increase of $0.60 per barrel, respectively, and a decrease in other manufacturing costs of $0.71 per barrel and an increase of $0.72 per barrel, respectively. The decrease in planned turnaround and major maintenance costs for 2015 was primarily attributable to the Galveston Bay, Robinson and Garyville refineries, partially offset by an increase at the Detroit refinery. The increase in planned turnaround and major maintenance costs for 2014 was primarily attributable to the Galveston Bay, Robinson and Catlettsburg refineries, partially offset by decreases at the Garyville and Canton refineries. The decrease in other manufacturing costs was primarily attributable to lower energy costs and routine maintenance costs for 2015. The increase in other manufacturing costs was primarily attributable to higher energy costs, catalyst expenses and routine maintenance costs for 2014.

We purchase RINs to satisfy a portion of our RFS2 compliance. Our expenses associated with purchased RINs were $212 million in 2015, $141 million in 2014 and $264 million in 2013. The increase in 2015 was primarily due to a $46 million charge in the second quarter to recognize increased estimated costs for compliance based on the renewable fuel standards for 2014 and 2015 proposed by the EPA in May 2015 and finalized in November 2015, particularly those for bio-mass based diesel and advanced biofuels. The remaining increase was primarily due to increased purchases of biomass based diesel RINs, at an increased average cost in 2015 as compared to 2014, partially offset by decreased purchases of ethanol RINs, at a decreased average cost in 2015 as compared to 2014. The decrease in 2014 was primarily due to decreases in the average cost of ethanol and biomass-based biodiesel RINs and decreases in our estimated advanced biofuel and ethanol obligation volumes.

Speedway segment income from operations increased $129 million in 2015 compared to 2014 and $169 million in 2014 compared to 2013, primarily due to increases in our gasoline and distillate gross margin of $401 million and $246 million, respectively, and increases in our merchandise gross margin of $393 million and $150 million, respectively, partially offset by higher operating expenses. The increases were primarily attributable the full year effect of the locations acquired along the East Coast and Southeast on September 30, 2014. The increases in merchandise gross margin were related to a combination of higher merchandise and food sales and improved margins. In the fourth quarter of 2015, we recognized an LCM inventory valuation charge of $25 million.

Gasoline & distillate gross margin (dollars per gallon) <sup>(a)</sup>	$ 0.1823	$ 0.1775	$ 0.1441
Merchandise gross margin (in millions)	$ 1,368	$ 975	$ 825
Merchandise gross margin percent	28.0%	27.0%	26.3%

<sup>(a)</sup> The price paid by consumers less the cost of refined products, including transportation, consumer excise taxes and bankcard processing fees, divided by gasoline and distillate sales volume. Excludes LCM inventory valuation charge.

Midstream segment income from operations increased $9 million in 2015 compared to 2014 and increased $70 million in 2014 compared to 2013. The increase in 2015 was primarily due to the financial results of MarkWest, which are reflected in Midstream segment income from the December 4, 2015 MarkWest Merger date, partially offset by $30 million of transaction costs. The increase in 2014 was primarily due to higher pipeline transportation revenue and an increase in income from our pipeline affiliates, which was primarily attributable to our investment in LOOP, partially offset by an increase in operating expenses primarily attributable to the proposed Comerstone pipeline project and pipeline maintenance costs.

Corporate and other unallocated expenses increased $22 million in 2015 compared to 2014 and $15 million in 2014 compared to 2013. The increase in 2015 was primarily due to a lower allocation of employee benefit costs to the segments. The increase in 2014 was primarily due to costs incurred in connection with the acquisition of Hess' Retail Operations and Related Assets in 2014.

Unallocated items also included an impairment charge of $144 million recorded in the third quarter of 2015 related to the cancellation of the ROUX project at our Garyville refinery. The charge reflects the write-off of all costs capitalized on the project through September 30, 2015, including front-end engineering and long lead time equipment. See Item 8. Financial Statements and Supplementary Data – Note 17 for additional information on the impairment.

We recorded pretax pension settlement expenses of $4 million in 2015, $96 million in 2014 and $95 million in 2013 resulting from the level of employee lump sum retirement distributions that occurred during these years.

Table of Contents

Our practice is to keep our assets in good operating condition through routine repair and maintenance of component parts in the ordinary course of business and by continuing to make improvements based on technological advances. As a result, we believe that generally these assets have no expected settlement date for purposes of estimating asset retirement obligations since the dates or ranges of dates upon which we would retire these assets cannot be reasonably estimated at this time.

Income taxes – Deferred tax assets and liabilities are recognized for the estimated future tax consequences attributable to differences between the financial statement carrying amounts of assets and liabilities and their tax bases. Deferred tax assets are recorded when it is more likely than not that they will be realized. The realization of deferred tax assets is assessed periodically based on several factors, primarily our expectation to generate sufficient future taxable income.

Stock-based compensation arrangements – The fair value of stock options granted to our employees is estimated on the date of grant using the Black-Scholes option pricing model. The model employs various assumptions, based on management's estimates at the time of grant, which impact the calculation of fair value and ultimately, the amount of expense that is recognized over the vesting period of the stock option award. Of the required assumptions, the expected life of the stock option award and the expected volatility of our stock price have the most significant impact on the fair value calculation. The average expected life is based on our historical employee exercise behavior. The assumption for expected volatility of our stock price reflects a weighting of 50 percent of our common stock implied volatility and 50 percent of MPC's common stock historical volatility.

The fair value of restricted stock awards granted to our employees is determined based on the fair market value of our common stock on the date of grant. The fair value of performance unit awards granted to our employees is estimated on the date of grant using a Monte Carlo valuation model.

Our stock-based compensation expense is recognized based on management's estimate of the awards that are expected to vest, using the straight-line attribution method for all service-based awards with a graded vesting feature. If actual forfeiture results are different than expected, adjustments to recognized compensation expense may be required in future periods. Unearned stock-based compensation is charged to equity when restricted stock awards are granted. Compensation expense is recognized over the vesting period and is adjusted if conditions of the restricted stock award are not met.

Business combinations - We recognize and measure the assets acquired and liabilities assumed in a business combination based on their estimated fair values at the acquisition date, with any remaining difference recorded as goodwill or gain from a bargain purchase. For all material acquisitions, management engages an independent valuation specialist to assist with the determination of fair value of the assets acquired, liabilities assumed, noncontrolling interest, if any, and goodwill, based on recognized business valuation methodologies. If the initial accounting for the business combination is incomplete by the end of the reporting period in which the acquisition occurs, an estimate will be recorded. Subsequent to the acquisition, and not later than one year from the acquisition date, we will record any material adjustments to the initial estimate based on new information obtained about facts and circumstances that existed as of the acquisition date. An income, market or cost valuation method may be utilized to estimate the fair value of the assets acquired, liabilities assumed, and noncontrolling interest, if any, in a business combination. The income valuation method represents the present value of future cash flows over the life of the asset using: (i) discrete financial forecasts, which rely on management's estimates of revenue and operating expenses; (ii) long-term growth rates; and (iii) appropriate discount rates. The market valuation method uses prices paid for a reasonably similar asset by other purchasers in the market, with adjustments relating to any differences between the assets. The cost valuation method is based on the replacement cost of a comparable asset at prices at the time of the acquisition reduced for depreciation of the asset. Acquisition-related costs are expensed as incurred in connection with each business combination.

Renewable fuel identification numbers – We purchase RINs to satisfy a portion of our RFS2 compliance. We record a short-term intangible asset, included in other current assets on the balance sheet, for RINs owned in excess of our anticipated current period compliance requirements. The asset value is based on the product of the excess RINs as of the balance sheet date, if any, and the average cost of our RINs. We record a current liability, included in other current liabilities on the balance sheet, when we are deficient RINs based on the product of the deficient RINs as of the balance sheet date, if any, and the market price of the RINs at the balance sheet date. The cost of RINs used for compliance is reflected in cost of revenues. Any gains or losses on the sale or expiration of RINs are classified as other income. Proceeds from RIN sales are included in investing activities - all other, net on the cash flow statement.

Table of ContentsEnvironmental and energy laws and regulations may result in increased operating costs and capital expenditures and may have a material and adverse effect on us.

New environmental and energy laws and regulations, including new regulations relating to alternative energy sources and the risk of global climate change, new interpretations of existing environmental and energy laws and regulations, increased governmental enforcement of environmental and energy laws and regulations or other developments in these areas could require us to make additional unforeseen expenditures or to make unforeseen changes to our operations, either of which could adversely affect us. For example, it is possible that some form of regulation will be forthcoming at the federal level in the United States with respect to emissions of greenhouse gases (“GHGs”), such as carbon dioxide, methane and nitrous oxides. New federal legislation or regulatory programs that restrict emissions of GHGs, or comparable new state legislation or programs, in areas where we conduct business could adversely affect our operations and the demand for our energy products, which could have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition, liquidity, results of operations and prospects. In addition, new legislation or regulatory programs could require substantial expenditures for the installation and operation of systems and equipment that we do not currently possess or for substantial modifications to existing equipment. The actual effects of climate change on our businesses are, however, unknown and indeterminable at this time.

Existing environmental and energy laws and regulations could also adversely affect us. For example, pursuant to the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007, the EPA has promulgated the Renewable Fuel Standard (“RFS”), which requires refiners to blend renewable fuels, such as ethanol and biodiesel, with their petroleum fuels or purchase renewable energy credits, known as RINs, in lieu of blending. The EPA generally establishes new annual renewable fuel percentage standards for each compliance year in the preceding year. We generate RINs in our marketing operations under the RFS, however it is not enough to meet the needs of our refining capacity and RINs must be purchased on the open market. In recent years the price of RINs has been extremely volatile. As a result, the purchase of RINs could have a negative impact on our future refined fuels margins, the impact of which we are not able to estimate at this time.

Environmental liabilities could have a material adverse effect on us.

Many of our current and former facilities have been in operation for many years and, over that time, we and other operators of those facilities have generated, used, stored and disposed of substances or wastes that are or might be considered hazardous under applicable environmental laws, including liquid fertilizers, chemicals and fuels stored in underground and above-ground tanks. Any past or future actions in violation of applicable environmental laws could subject us to administrative penalties, fines, other costs, such as capital expenditures, and injunctions. In addition, an owner or operator of contaminated property, and a party who sends hazardous materials to such site for treatment, storage, disposal or recycling, can be liable for the cost of investigation and remediation under environmental laws. In some instances, such liability exists regardless of fault. Moreover, future or unknown past releases of hazardous substances could subject us to private lawsuits claiming damages, including for bodily injury or property damage, and to adverse publicity, which could have a material adverse effect on us. Liabilities, including legal costs, related to remediation of contaminated properties are not recognized by us until the related costs are considered probable and can be reasonably estimated.

Actual or perceived quality, safety or health risks associated with our products could subject us to significant liability and damage our business and reputation.

If any of our food or feed products became adulterated or misbranded, we would need to recall those items and could experience product liability claims if consumers or customers’ livestock were injured as a result. A widespread product recall or a significant product liability judgment could cause our products to be unavailable for a period of time or could cause a loss of consumer or customer confidence in our products. Even if a product liability claim is unsuccessful or is not fully pursued, the negative publicity surrounding any assertion that our products caused illness or injury could adversely affect our business and reputation with existing and potential consumers and customers and our corporate and brand image. Moreover, claims or liabilities of this sort might not be covered by our insurance or by any rights of indemnity or contribution that we may have against others. In addition, general public perceptions regarding the quality, safety or health risks associated with particular food or feed products, such as concerns regarding pressure as energy and commodity prices remain low and potentially decline further. As we operate in this ongoing down cycle, we have taken and are continuing to take prudent actions regarding costs and investments, while continuing to position ourselves to take advantage of opportunities as they arise. These prudent actions included holding overhead costs flat and reducing capital investments for fiscal 2016, which we intend to continue through fiscal 2017 and into fiscal 2018, as well as focusing on the return we earn on our investments in assets.

While our revenues and operating results are derived from businesses and operations which are wholly-owned and majority-owned, a portion of our business operations are conducted through companies in which we hold ownership interests of 50% or less and do not control the operations. We account for these investments primarily using the equity method of accounting, wherein we record our proportionate share of income or loss reported by the entity as equity income from investments, without consolidating the revenues and expenses of the entity in our Consolidated Statements of Operations. In our Ag segment, this principally includes our 50% ownership in TEMCO, LLC. In our Nitrogen Production segment, this consists of our 11.4% ownership in CF Nitrogen. In our Foods segment, this consists of our 50% ownership in Ventura Foods. In Corporate and Other, this principally includes our 12% ownership in Ardent Mills.

Results of Operations

Comparison of the years ended August 31, 2016 and 2015

General. We recorded income before income taxes of $419.9 million during the year ended August 31, 2016, compared to $768.2 million recorded during the year ended August 31, 2015, a decrease of $348.3 million (45%). Results reflect decreased pretax earnings in our Energy and Ag segments, as well as Corporate and Other, partially offset by increased pretax earnings in our Foods segment, which was previously reported as a component of Corporate and Other, and our new Nitrogen Production segment, which reflects the results of our strategic investment in CF Nitrogen.

Our Energy segment generated income before income taxes of $275.4 million for the year ended August 31, 2016, compared to $538.1 million for the year ended August 31, 2015, representing a decrease of $262.7 million (49%), primarily due to significantly reduced refining margins in fiscal 2016. Our transportation business also experienced a decline while our propane and lubricants businesses earnings increased versus the prior year. We are subject to the Renewable Fuel Standard ("RFS") which requires refiners to blend renewable fuels (e.g., ethanol, biodiesel) into their finished transportation fuels or purchase renewable energy credits, known as Renewable Identification Numbers ("RINs"), in lieu of blending. The EPA generally establishes new annual renewable fuel percentage standards for each compliance year in the preceding year. We generate RINs under the RFS in our renewable fuels operations and through our blending activities at our terminals, however we cannot generate enough RINs to meet the needs of our refining capacity and RINs must be purchased on the open market. The price of RINs can be volatile. On November 30, 2015, the EPA released the final mandate for years 2014, 2015, and 2016 resulting in an increase to the price of RINs. This price increase did not have a material impact on our financial results during fiscal 2016 or 2015 as it related to our purchases of RINs.

Our Ag segment generated income before income taxes of $31.0 million for the year ended August 31, 2016, compared to $149.6 million in the year ended August 31, 2015, a decrease in earnings of $118.6 million (79%). Our country operations earnings decreased $82.9 million primarily due to lower grain margins, which was partially offset by increased grain volumes during the year ended August 31, 2016, compared to the prior year. Earnings from our wholesale crop nutrients business decreased $59.0 million for the year ended August 31, 2016, compared to the prior year, primarily due to decreased margins. Our processing and food ingredients business experienced a decrease in earnings of $56.6 million for the year ended August 31, 2016 compared with the prior year, primarily due to charges associated with the disposal and impairment of assets as well as a charge associated with a specific customer receivable and, to a lesser extent, lower margins in our soybean crushing business. Our grain marketing earnings decreased $36.4 million during the year ended August 31, 2016, compared with the prior year, primarily as a result of decreased margins, partially offset by increased volumes. Earnings from our renewable fuels marketing and production operations decreased $2.2 million during the year ended August 31, 2016, primarily due to lower market prices for ethanol and was partially offset by increased volumes. The lower margins referenced above are the result of the down cycle in the Ag economy previously discussed, which has resulted in reduced commodity prices and lower margins across the globe. These decreases were partially offset by a fiscal 2015 impairment

Governmental Regulation

All of our operations and properties are subject to extensive federal, state and local environmental, health and safety regulations governing, among other things, the generation, storage, handling, use and transportation of petroleum and hazardous substances; the emission and discharge of materials into the environment; waste management; characteristics and composition of gasoline, diesel and other fuels; and the monitoring, reporting and control of greenhouse gas emissions. Our operations also require numerous permits and authorizations under various environmental, health and safety laws and regulations. Failure to comply with these permits or environmental, health or safety laws generally could result in fines, penalties, or other sanctions, or a revocation of our permits. We have made significant capital and other expenditures to comply with these environmental, health and safety laws. We anticipate significant capital and other expenditures with respect to continuing compliance with these environmental, health and safety laws. For additional details on our capital expenditures related to regulatory requirements, see Item 7. Management's Discussion and Analysis of Financial Condition and Results of Operations — Liquidity and Capital Resources — Capital Spending.

Periodically, we receive communications from various federal, state and local governmental authorities asserting violations of environmental laws and/or regulations. These governmental entities may also propose or assess fines or require corrective action for these asserted violations. We intend to respond in a timely manner to all such communications and to take appropriate corrective actions. We do not anticipate that any such matters currently asserted will have a material adverse impact on our financial condition, results of operations or cash flows.

See Note 23. Contingencies, in the Notes to Consolidated Financial Statements included in this annual report for detailed information on certain environmental matters.

Regulation of Fuel Quality

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency ("EPA") finalized Tier III regulations for gasoline sulfur content in 2014. The regulations have lowered gasoline sulfur content to 10 parts per million with an effective date of 2017 for our El Paso and St. Paul Park refineries and 2020 for our Gallup refinery. Meeting these regulations will require capital spending and adjustments to the operations of our refineries.

The EPA has issued Renewable Fuels Standards ("RFS") under the Energy Acts of 2005 and 2007, implementing mandates to blend increasing volumes of renewable fuels into the petroleum fuels produced at obligated refineries through the year 2022. The EPA established its final 2014 and 2015 blending volume requirements in November 2015, after the statutory deadlines. The EPA is required to establish the volume of renewable fuels that refineries must blend into their refined petroleum fuels annually. Obligated refineries, including each of our three refineries, demonstrate compliance with the RFS through the accumulation of RINs, which are unique serial numbers acquired through blending renewable fuels or direct purchase. Our compliance strategy includes blending at our refineries, transferring RINs from blending across our refinery and terminal system and purchasing third-party RINs. Blending renewable fuels into the finished petroleum fuels to comply with federal and state requirements could displace an increasing volume of a refinery's product pool.

Minnesota law currently requires the use of biofuels in gasoline and diesel sold in the state for combustion in internal combustion engines. Fuels produced at the St. Paul Park refinery are currently blended with the appropriate amounts of ethanol or biodiesel to ensure that they comply with applicable federal and state renewable fuel standards. Industry organizations representing Minnesota truckers and auto dealers, U.S. auto manufacturers and U.S. fuels manufacturers have filed suit to challenge Minnesota's biodiesel mandate claiming it is in conflict with the RFS standards and the final outcome is yet to be determined.

Environmental Remediation

Certain environmental laws hold current or previous owners or operators of real property liable for the costs of cleaning up spills, releases and discharges of petroleum or hazardous substances, even if those owners or operators did not know of and were not responsible for such spills, releases and discharges. These environmental laws also assess liability on any person who arranges for the disposal or treatment of hazardous substances, regardless of whether the affected site is owned or operated by such person. We may face currently unknown liabilities for clean-up costs pursuant to these laws.

In addition to clean-up costs, we may face liability for personal injury or property damage due to exposure to chemicals or other hazardous substances that we may have manufactured, used, handled, disposed of or that are located at or released from our refineries and fueling stations or otherwise related to our current or former operations. We may also face liability for personal injury, property damage, natural resource damage or for clean-up costs for any alleged migration of petroleum or hazardous substances from our facilities or transport operations.

Employees

As of December 31, 2015, our companies employed 7,347 people including 2,961 NTI employees and 562 WNRL employees in its wholesale segment. The collective bargaining agreements covering the El Paso and Gallup refinery employees expire in April 2021 and May 2020, respectively. While all of our collective bargaining agreements contain "no strike" provisions, those provisions are not effective in the event that an agreement expires. Accordingly, we may not be able to prevent a strike or work stoppage in the future and any such work stoppage could have a material effect on our business, financial condition and results of operations. The collective bargaining agreements covering the NTI employees associated with its refining and retail operations expire in December 2016 and August 2017, respectively. Through our control of WNRL's general partner and its affiliate entities, we have seconded 218 full-time employees to WNRL as well as other employees who may provide services to WNRL from time to time.

In addition, we may face liability for alleged personal injury or property damage due to exposure to chemicals or other hazardous substances located at or released from our facilities or otherwise related to our current or former operations. We may also face liability for personal injury, property damage, natural resource damage, or for clean-up costs for the alleged migration of contamination or other hazardous substances from our facilities to adjacent and other nearby properties.

We may incur significant costs to comply with environmental, health and safety laws and regulations.

Our operations and properties are subject to extensive federal, state and local environmental, health and safety regulations governing, among other things, the generation, storage, handling, use and transportation of petroleum and hazardous substances, the emission and discharge of materials into the environment, waste management, characteristics and composition of gasoline, diesel and other fuels and the monitoring, reporting and control of greenhouse gas emissions. If we fail to comply with these regulations, we may be subject to administrative, civil and criminal proceedings by governmental authorities, as well as civil proceedings by environmental groups and other entities and individuals. A failure to comply, and any related proceedings, including lawsuits, could result in significant costs and liabilities, penalties, judgments against us or governmental or court orders that could alter, limit or stop our operations.

In addition, new environmental laws and regulations, including new regulations relating to alternative energy sources and increased vehicle fuel economy, new state regulations relating to fuel quality, and the risk of global climate change regulation, as well as new interpretations of existing laws and regulations, increased governmental enforcement, or other developments could require us to make additional unforeseen expenditures. Many of these laws and regulations are becoming increasingly stringent, and the cost of compliance with these requirements can be expected to increase over time. We are not able to predict the impact of new or changed laws or regulations or changes in the ways that such laws or regulations are administered, interpreted, or enforced. The requirements to be met, as well as the technology and length of time available to meet those requirements, continue to develop and change. To the extent that the costs associated with meeting any or all of these requirements are substantial and not adequately provided for, there could be a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition, results of operations and cash flows.

The EPA has issued rules pursuant to the Clean Air Act that require refiners to reduce the sulfur content of gasoline and diesel fuel and reduce the benzene content of gasoline by various specified dates. We incurred, and may incur in the future, substantial costs to comply with the EPA's low sulfur and low benzene rules. Our strategy for complying with low sulfur gasoline and low benzene gasoline regulations at our refineries relies partially on purchasing credits. If credits are not available or are too costly, we may not be able to meet the EPA's deadlines using a credit strategy. Failure to meet the EPA's clean fuels mandates could have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition, results of operations and cash flows.

Various states have proposed and/or enacted low carbon fuel standards ("LCFS") intended to reduce carbon intensity in transportation fuels. In addition, in 2010 the EPA issued social cost of carbon ("SCC") estimates used by the EPA and other federal agencies in regulatory cost-benefit analyses to take into account alleged broad economic consequences associated with emissions of greenhouse gases. These estimates were increased in 2013. While the impacts of LCFS and higher SCC in future regulations is not known at this time, either of these may result in increased costs to our operations.

Renewable fuels mandates may reduce demand for the petroleum fuels we produce, which could have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition, results of operations and cash flows.

Pursuant to the Energy Policy Act of 2005 and the Energy Independence and Security Act of 2007, the EPA has promulgated the RFS implementing mandates to blend renewable fuels into petroleum fuels produced and sold in the United States. We are subject to the RFS, which requires obligated parties to blend renewable fuels, such as ethanol, into petroleum fuels sold in the United States. A RIN is generated for each gallon of renewable fuel produced under the RFS. At the end of each year, obligated parties must surrender sufficient RINs to meet their renewable fuel obligations under the RFS. The obligated volume increases annually over time until 2022. The obligation for our refineries is met through a combination of blending renewable fuels and purchasing RINs from other parties. We must also purchase waiver credits for cellulosic biofuels from the EPA. Uncertainty surrounding RFS requirements in recent years has resulted in increased volatility in RIN prices. We cannot predict the future prices of RINs or waiver credits, but the costs to obtain the necessary number of RINs and waiver credits could be material.

In 2010 and 2011, the EPA issued partial waivers with conditions allowing a maximum of 15% ethanol to be used in certain vehicles. Future changes to existing laws and regulations could increase the minimum volumes of renewable fuels that must be blended with refined petroleum fuels. Because we do not produce renewable fuels, increasing the volume of renewable fuels that must be blended into our products could displace an increasing volume of our refineries' product pool, potentially resulting in lower earnings and materially adversely affecting our business, financial condition and results of operations and cash flows.

Certain states, including Minnesota and New Mexico, have renewable fuel mandates that could further displace volume of a refinery's product pool. Minnesota law currently requires that all diesel sold in the state for use in internal combustion engines, with limited exceptions, must contain at least 10% biodiesel which may increase to 20% in 2018. Minnesota law also currently requires, with limited exceptions, that all gasoline sold or offered for sale in the state must contain the maximum amount of ethanol allowed under federal law for use in all gasoline powered motor vehicles. New Mexico law currently requires that all diesel sold in the state for use in internal combustion engines, with limited exceptions, must contain at least 5% biodiesel. Although the state has historically waived this mandate due to infrastructure limitations within the state, future waivers are not guaranteed.

If sufficient RINs are unavailable for purchase or if we have to pay a significantly higher price for RINs, or if we are otherwise unable to meet the EPA's RFS mandates, our business, financial condition and results of operations could be materially adversely affected.

Under the RFS, the volume of renewable fuels refineries are obligated to blend into their finished petroleum products is adjusted annually. We currently blend renewable fuels and purchase RINs on the open market, as well as waiver credits for cellulosic biofuels from the EPA, in order to comply with the RFS. Existing laws or regulations could change, and the minimum volumes of renewable fuels that must be blended with refined petroleum products may increase. In the future, we may be required to purchase additional RINs on the open market and waiver credits from the EPA in order to comply with the RFS.

During 2013, the price of RINs was very volatile as the EPA's proposed renewable fuel volume mandates approached the "blend wall." The blend wall refers to the point at which refiners are required to blend more ethanol into the transportation fuel supply than can be supported by the demand for E10 gasoline (gasoline containing 10 percent ethanol by volume). In November 2013, the EPA published the annual renewable fuel percentage standards for 2014, which acknowledged the blend wall and were generally lower than the volumes for 2013 and lower than statutory mandates. The price of RINs decreased significantly after the 2014 percentage standards were published; however, RIN prices remained volatile and increased subsequently in 2014. In November 2015, the EPA published final notice for RFS obligated volumes for 2014, 2015 and 2016 and Biomass-Based Diesel for 2017. The current standard for 2016 may cause the blend wall to again become an issue affecting the overall supply of RINs.

We cannot predict the future prices of RINs or waiver credits. The cost of RINs is dependent upon a variety of factors, which include EPA regulations, the availability of RINs for purchase, the price at which RINs can be purchased, transportation fuel production levels, the mix of our petroleum products, as well as the fuel blending performed at our refineries, all of which can vary significantly from quarter to quarter. Additionally, because we do not produce renewable fuels, increasing the volume of renewable fuels that must be blended into our products could displace an increasing volume of our refineries' product pool, potentially resulting in lower earnings. If sufficient RINs are unavailable for purchase or if we have to pay a significantly higher price for RINs, or if we are otherwise unable to meet the EPA's RFS mandates, our business, financial condition, results of operations and cash flows could be materially adversely affected.

We could incur significant costs to comply with greenhouse gas emissions regulation or legislation.

The EPA has adopted and implemented regulations to restrict emissions of greenhouse gases under certain provisions of the Clean Air Act. For example, the EPA requires, in certain circumstances, permitting of certain emissions of greenhouse gases from large stationary sources, such as refineries. The EPA has also adopted rules requiring refiners to report greenhouse gas emissions on an annual basis for emissions occurring after January 1, 2010. Further, the United States Congress has considered legislation related to the reduction of greenhouse gases through "cap and trade" programs. In addition, Minnesota is a participant in the Midwest Greenhouse Gas Reduction Accord, a non-binding resolution that could lead to the creation of a regional greenhouse gas cap-and-trade program if the Minnesota legislature and the legislatures of other participating states and province enact implementing legislation. Although the participating states and Canadian province are not currently pursuing this commitment, similar state or regional initiatives may be pursued in the future.

On the international level, on December 12, 2015, 195 nations, including the U.S., finalized the text of an international climate change accord in Paris, France (the "Paris Agreement"). The Paris Agreement calls for countries to set their own GHG emissions targets, make these emissions targets more stringent over time and be transparent about the GHG emissions reporting and the measures each country will use to achieve its GHG emissions targets. Additional U.S. GHG emissions reduction laws, regulations or other initiatives may be required in the future in connection with the Paris Agreement.

To the extent that future legislation, rules and regulations are enacted, our operating costs, including capital expenditures, may increase and additional operating restrictions could be imposed on our business, which could have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition, results of operations and cash flows. Finally, some scientists have concluded that increasing concentrations of greenhouse gases in the earth's atmosphere may produce climate changes that may have significant physical effects, such as increased frequency and severity of storms, droughts, floods and other climatic events, which if any Refinery gross margin increased from 2013 to 2014 due primarily to a higher net gain on hedging activities. Excluding the impact of our hedging activities, refining margin per throughput barrel declined slightly from 2013 to 2014, reflective of lower refining industry margins. The Gulf Coast benchmark 3:2:1 crack spread decreased from $19.97 in 2013 to $15.81 in 2014. The Gulf Coast crack spread was negatively impacted by the lower discount of WTI crude oil to Brent crude oil, which declined from $10.67 per barrel in 2013 to $5.66 in 2014, reflective of the initial decline of global and domestic crude oil prices that began in 2014. However, during 2014, refining margins at our El Paso refinery benefited from the positive impact of the discount of WTI Midland crude oil to WTI Cushing crude oil. The WTI Midland/Cushing differential averaged $6.92 per barrel for 2014 compared to $2.63 in 2013. This discount has been volatile and fluctuates based on local crude oil production, crude oil outflow at Cushing and regional refining throughput volumes.

During 2015, we recognized a net realized and unrealized gain from economic hedging activities of $46.7 million compared to a gain of $280.2 million in 2014 and a gain of $0.8 million in 2013. We enter into hedge contracts to manage our exposure to commodity price risks or to fix sales margins on future gasoline and distillate production. Unrealized mark-to-market gains and losses related to our economic hedging instruments are the result of differences between forward crack spreads and the fixed margins from our hedge contracts. We incur unrealized commodity hedging losses when forward spreads are in excess of our fixed contract margins. Hedging gains or losses are included within cost of product sold, directly impacting our refining gross margin. We also recognized the negative margin impact of the greater net cost of purchased RINs. RIN costs were $35.5 million, $28.2 million and $30.5 million for the years ended December 31, 2015, 2014 and 2013, respectively. The increase in 2015 is primarily due to revised Renewable Fuel Standard blending requirements increased by the EPA in the fourth quarter of 2015 for the 2014 and 2015 calendar years.

Total refinery throughput increased from 2013 to 2014, and from 2014 to 2015 primarily due to El Paso refinery operational efficiencies gained from the turnarounds in 2013 and 2014. Also, our refined product sales volume was 86.5 million, 79.4 million and 64.5 million barrels in December 31, 2015, 2014 and 2013, respectively.

Direct Operating Expenses

The increase in direct operating expenses from 2014 to 2015 is primarily due to increases in employee expenses of $6.0 million primarily generated by increased headcount, railcar lease expense of $3.6 million due to new short term leases in 2015, property tax expense of $1.7 million, outside support services expense of $1.5 million and maintenance expense of $1.3 million due to maintenance projects at the El Paso refinery. A partial offset to these increases was a decrease in energy expense of $12.0 million due to decreased natural gas prices.

The increase in direct operating expenses from 2013 through 2014 was primarily due to greater maintenance expense at our El Paso refinery ($16.7 million), property tax expense due to a 2013 refund of a 2012 property tax expense resulting from a corrected property appraisal ($10.8 million), energy expenses due to an increase in price and volume of natural gas ($8.4 million) and outside support services ($4.1 million).

Selling, General and Administrative Expenses

Selling, general and administrative expense increased from 2014 to 2015 primarily due to increased employee expenses ($1.0 million) due to greater incentive compensation expenses, professional and legal costs ($0.7 million) and information technology expenses ($0.6 million).

Selling, general and administrative expense increased from 2013 to 2014 primarily due to increased information technology expenses ($1.5 million).

Maintenance Turnaround Expenses

We reported minimal turnaround expenses during the year ended December 31, 2015. During the year ended December 31, 2014, we incurred turnaround expenses of $48.5 million for a turnaround of the south side units of the El Paso refinery, compared to 2013 turnaround expenses of $50.2 million, mainly related to turnaround activity at the north side units at El Paso.

Depreciation and Amortization

Depreciation and amortization increased from 2014 to 2015 due to additional depreciation at our El Paso refinery primarily resulting from assets capitalized during the first quarter of 2014 in El Paso and additional depreciation associated with recently capitalized assets.

Depreciation and amortization increased from 2013 to 2014 due to additional depreciation at our El Paso refinery primarily resulting from assets capitalized during the first quarter of 2013 and 2014 in El Paso.

At December 31, 2015, and 2014, liabilities for remediation and closure obligations by NTI totaled $8.6 million and $8.7 million, respectively, of which $2.6 million and $2.9 million, respectively, are recorded on a discounted basis. These discounted liabilities are expected to be settled over at least the next 22 years. At December 31, 2015, the estimated future cash flows to settle these discounted liabilities totaled $3.2 million and are discounted at a rate of 2.74%. Receivables for recoverable costs from the state, under programs to assist companies in clean-up efforts related to underground storage tanks at retail marketing outlets, and others were $0.1 million and $0.2 million at December 31, 2015, and 2014, respectively.

On June 3, 2014, the St. Paul Park refinery was issued a National Pollutant Discharge Elimination Permit/State Disposal System Permit by the Minnesota Pollution Control Agency ("MPCA") relating to its upgraded wastewater treatment plant at its St. Paul Park refinery. This permit required the refinery to conduct additional testing of its remaining lagoon. The testing was completed in the fourth quarter of 2014, following NTI's review of the test results and additional discussions with MPCA. NTI now regards the likelihood of future remediation and closure costs related to the lagoon as probable. At December 31, 2015 and 2014, NTI estimated the remediation and closure costs to be approximately $6.0 million and $5.8 million, respectively, subject to further engineering and methodology studies. In connection with NTI's December 2010 acquisition of the St. Paul Park refinery, among other assets, from the Marathon Petroleum Company LP ("Marathon"), NTI entered into an agreement with Marathon that required Marathon to share in the future remediation costs of this lagoon, should they be required. During the third quarter of 2015, NTI entered into a settlement and release agreement with Marathon and received $3.5 million pursuant to this settlement that NTI recorded as a reduction of direct operating expenses.

Tax Matters

See Note 16, Income Taxes, to these consolidated financial statements for additional information on tax examinations.

Union Matters

During 2014, we successfully negotiated a collective bargaining agreement covering employees at the Gallup refinery that expires in 2020. During 2015, we successfully negotiated a new collective bargaining agreement covering employees at the El Paso refinery that is scheduled to expire in April of 2021. While all of the collective bargaining agreements contain "no strike" provisions, those provisions are not effective in the event that an agreement expires. Accordingly, we may not be able to prevent a strike or work stoppage in the future, and any such work stoppage could have a material adverse effect on our business, financial condition and results of operations.

NTI's refining business has 185 employees associated with its operations that are covered by a collective bargaining agreement that expires in December 2016. NTI's retail business has 25 employees associated with its operations that are covered by a collective bargaining agreement that expires in August 2017.

Other Matters

The EPA has issued Renewable Fuels Standards ("RFS"), that require us and other refiners to blend renewable fuels into the refined products produced at our refineries. Annually, the EPA is required to establish a volume of renewable fuels that refineries must blend into their refined petroleum fuels. However, the EPA has not established the final renewable blending volume level for 2014 or 2015. To the extent we are unable to blend at the rate necessary to satisfy the EPA mandated volume, we purchase Renewable Identification Numbers ("RINs"). The purchase price for RINs is volatile and may vary significantly from period to period. Historically, the cost of purchased RINs has not had a significant impact on our operating results. We anticipate that 2014 and 2015 will be consistent with this history. The net cost of meeting our estimated renewable volume obligations, including sales and purchases of RINs, was $35.5 million, $28.2 million and $30.5 million for the year ended December 31, 2015, 2014 and 2013, respectively.

In addition, the EPA has investigated and brought enforcement actions against companies it believes produced invalid RINs. We may have purchased RINs that the EPA will determine are invalid. Previously, we have entered into settlements and entered into another settlement in May 2015, with the EPA regarding RINs we purchased that the EPA ultimately determined were invalid. While we do not know if the EPA will determine that other RINs we have purchased are invalid, at this time we do not expect any settlements we would enter into with the EPA would have a material effect on our financial condition, results of operations or cash flows.

We are party to various other claims and legal actions arising in the normal course of business. We believe that the resolution of these matters will not have a material effect on our financial condition, results of operations or cash flows.

2015 ANNUAL REPORT

formulation of gasoline we make for use in some areas. We do not believe such capital expenditures or the changes in our operation will result in a material adverse effect on our business.

On December 1, 2015, the EPA published final rules under the Risk and Technology Review provisions of the Clean Air Act to further regulate refinery air emissions through additional NSPS and Maximum Achievable Control Technology requirements (the "Refinery Sector Rules"). The final rules will require capital expenditures for additional controls on the Tyler refinery's coker and for the relief systems, flares, tanks and other sources at both refineries, as well as requiring changes to the way we operate, start up and maintain some process units. The final rule also requires that we monitor property line benzene concentrations and provide the results to the EPA quarterly, which will make the results available to the public. Even though the concentrations are not expected to exceed regulatory or health based standards, the availability of such data may increase the likelihood of lawsuits against our refineries by the local public or organized public interest groups. We have two to three years to comply with most of the requirements although we have filed for a compliance extension for some requirements that became effective on February 1, 2016. We do not anticipate that the required capital and operating costs will be material and do not believe compliance will affect our production capacities or have a material adverse effect upon our business, financial condition or results of operations.

In November 2013, the EPA proposed slightly lower overall renewable fuel obligations for 2014 in recognition of blending issues associated with exceeding the 10% "blendwall" (the point at which gasoline contains 10% ethanol - the maximum amount allowed by most vehicle warranties) in gasoline; however the EPA did not finalize the proposed 2014 obligations. In May 2015, the EPA re-proposed the 2014 obligation as well as proposing the obligation for 2015 and 2016, increasing the total nationwide volume of renewable fuels required in 2014 by 4.7% (compared to the 2013 proposal). Under this proposal, nationwide volumes for 2015 and 2016 would increase about 2% and 9% respectively compared with the proposed 2014 volume.

On November 30, 2015, EPA finalized the renewable fuel volume obligations for 2014, 2015 and 2016. Final volume requirements for 2015 and 2016 are approximately 2% and 5% higher respectively than the May, 2015, proposal. The 2016 ethanol volumes exceed the 10% "blendwall," requiring increased usage of higher ethanol blends such as E15 and E85. On a consolidated basis, we have sufficient RINs to meet our 2014 obligation; however, we will have to purchase approximately 15 million RINs to meet our 2015 obligation and have recorded a liability for net RIN obligations of $9.1 million as of December 31, 2015. In 2016 we will be unable to blend sufficient quantities of ethanol and biodiesel to meet our requirements and will have to purchase approximately 40 million to 50 million RINs. It is not possible at this time to predict with certainty what those volumes or costs may be but given the increase in required volumes and the volatile price of RINs, the increase in renewable volume requirements for 2016 could have an adverse impact on our results of operations if we are unable to recover those costs in the price of our refined products.

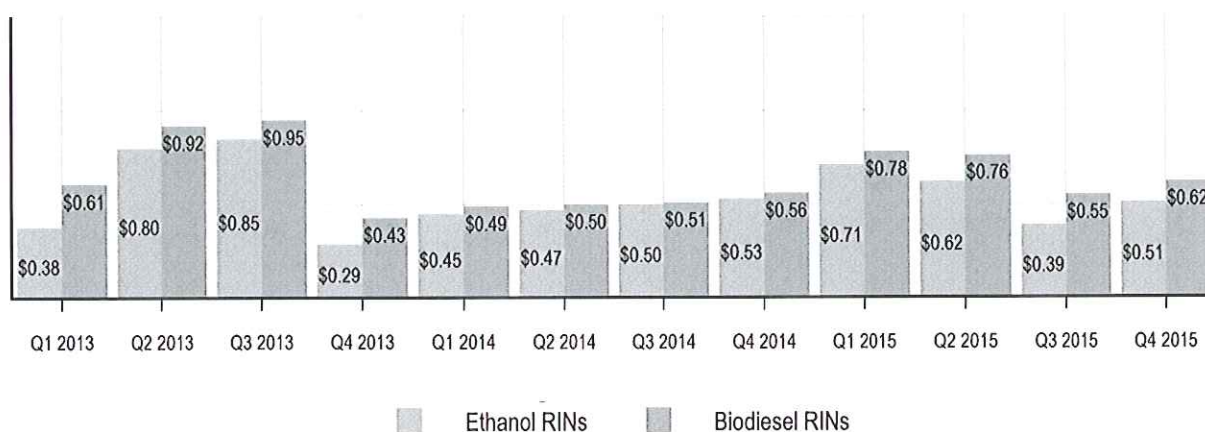

The EPA finalized Tier 3 gasoline rules in March 2014. The final Tier 3 rule requires a reduction in annual average gasoline sulfur content from 30 ppm to 10 ppm and retains the current maximum per-gallon sulfur content of 80 ppm. Larger refineries must comply with the 10 ppm sulfur standard by January 1, 2017 but the final rule provides a three-year waiver period, to January 1, 2020, for small volume refineries that processed less than 75,000 bpd in 2012. Both of our refineries meet this waiver provision. We anticipate that the Tyler refinery will meet these new limits when they become effective with only minor operational changes and that a minor capital project may be required for additional sulfur removal capacity at the El Dorado refinery. In February 2015, EPA issued a Direct Final Rule ("DFR") to address technical corrections to the Tier 3 standard requiring small volume refineries that increase their annual average crude processing rate above 75,000 bpd to meet the Tier 3 sulfur limits 30 months from that "disqualifying" date. Because adverse comments were received on this change, EPA withdrew the DFR but subsequently re-proposed the same revision. Our El Dorado refinery may average more than 75,000 bpd in 2016, accelerating its Tier 3 compliance date to as early as mid-2019 if the EPA finalizes the rule change. We expect the EPA to issue a final rule in the spring of 2016 but it is not known if the final regulations will be as originally proposed. However, we believe that our current refineries will generate sufficient sulfur credits to delay the need to produce 10 ppm gasoline at El Dorado to 2020.

Our operations are also subject to the Federal Clean Water Act ("CWA"), the Oil Pollution Act of 1990 ("OPA-90") and comparable state and local requirements. The CWA and similar laws prohibit any discharge into surface waters, ground waters, injection wells and publicly-owned treatment works except as allowed by pre-treatment permits and National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System ("NPDES") permits, issued by federal, state and local governmental agencies. The OPA-90 prohibits the discharge of oil into Waters of the U.S. and requires that affected facilities have plans in place to respond to spills and other discharges. The CWA also regulates filling or discharges to wetlands and other Waters of the U.S. In 2015, the EPA, in conjunction with the Army Corps of Engineers, issued a final rule regarding the definition of "Waters of the U.S.," which expanded the regulatory reach of the existing clean water regulations. Although the final rule is currently stayed pending litigation, if the rule becomes enforceable, it could increase costs for expanding our facilities or constructing new facilities, including pipelines.

Following the November 2008 explosion and fire at the Tyler refinery, the EPA conducted an investigation under Section 114 of the Clean Air Act pertaining to our compliance with the chemical accident prevention standards. In late 2011, the EPA referred an enforcement action to the U.S. Department of Justice and in the fourth quarter of 2014, we settled this matter by entering into a Consent Decree with the government. The Consent Decree required Delek to pay a penalty of $0.5 million and make a minor change to its written inspection procedures. The Consent Decree terminated upon completion of these requirements and had no effect on production at the refinery and no cost implications other than the penalty amount.

Environmental regulations continue to affect our margins in the form of the increasing cost of RINs. On a consolidated basis, we work to balance our RINs obligations in order to minimize the effect of RINs on our results. While we generate RINs in all three operating segments through our ethanol blending and biodiesel production, our refining segment needs to purchase additional RINs to satisfy its obligations. On a consolidated basis, we have sufficient RINs to meet our 2014 obligation; however, we will have to purchase approximately 15 million RINs to meet our 2015 obligation and have recorded a liability for net RIN obligations of $9.1 million as of December 31, 2015. As a result, increases in the price of RINs adversely affected our results of operations. It is not possible at this time to predict with certainty what future volumes or costs may be, but given the increase in required volumes and the volatile price of RINs, the cost of purchasing sufficient RINs could have an adverse impact on our results of operations if we are unable to recover those costs in the price of our refined products. The chart below illustrates the volatile nature of the price for RINs over the past three years.

General

Operating revenues decreased $7.2 billion (or 5 percent) for the year ended December 31, 2014 compared to the year ended December 31, 2013. This decrease was primarily due to a decrease in refined product prices in all of our regions. Despite the decline in operating revenues, operating income increased $1.9 billion in 2014 due primarily to a $1.7 billion increase in refining segment operating income, a $295 million increase in ethanol segment operating income, and a $34 million decrease in general and administrative expenses, partially offset by an $81 million decrease in retail segment operating income due to the spin-off of our retail business in 2013 as mentioned previously. The reasons for these changes in the operating results of our segments and general and administrative expenses, as well as other items that affected our income, are discussed below.

Refining

Refining segment operating income increased $1.7 billion from $4.2 billion in 2013 to $5.9 billion in 2014. Excluding the LIFO gain of $229 million in 2014 related to our refining segment, our refining segment operating income increased by $1.4 billion. This increase was primarily due to a $1.7 billion (or $1.36 per barrel) increase in refining margin, partially offset by a $190 million increase in operating expenses and a $31 million increase in depreciation and amortization expense.

The increase in refining margin of $1.7 billion was due primarily to the following:

- Higher discounts on light sweet crude oils and sour crude oils - Because the market prices for refined products generally track the price of Brent crude oil, which is a benchmark sweet crude oil, we benefit when we process crude oils that are priced at a discount to Brent crude oil. For 2014, the discount in the price of some light sweet crude oils and sour crude oils compared to the price of Brent crude oil widened. For example, LLS crude oil processed in our U.S. Gulf Coast region, which is a light sweet crude oil, sold at a discount of $2.79 per barrel to Brent crude oil in 2014 compared to $0.41 per barrel in 2013, representing a favorable increase of $2.38 per barrel. Another example is Maya crude oil, a sour crude oil, which sold at a discount of $13.73 per barrel to Brent crude oil in 2014 compared to a discount of $11.31 per barrel in 2013, representing a favorable increase of $2.42 per barrel. We estimate that the discounts for light sweet crude oils and sour crude oils that we processed in 2014 had a positive impact to our refining margin of approximately $680 million and $800 million, respectively.
- Higher throughput volumes - Refining throughput volumes increased 83,000 BPD in 2014. We estimate that the increase in refining throughput volumes had a positive impact on our refining margin of approximately $340 million.
- Lower costs of biofuel credits - As more fully described in Note 20 of Notes to Consolidated Financial Statements, we purchase biofuel credits in order to meet our biofuel blending obligations under various government and regulatory compliance programs, and the cost of these credits (primarily RINs in the U.S.) decreased by $145 million from $517 million in 2013 to $372 million in 2014. This decrease was due primarily to a reduction in the market price of RINs between the years.

- Trading Derivatives – Our objective for entering into commodity derivative instruments for trading purposes is to take advantage of existing market conditions related to future results of operations and cash flows.

As of December 31, 2015, we had the following outstanding commodity derivative instruments that were entered into for trading purposes. The information presents the notional volume of outstanding contracts by type of instrument and year of maturity (volumes in thousands of barrels, except those identified as natural gas contracts that are presented in billions of British thermal units).

Interest Rate Risk

Our primary market risk exposure for changes in interest rates relates to our debt obligations. We manage our exposure to changing interest rates through the use of a combination of fixed-rate and floating-rate debt. In addition, at times we have used interest rate swap agreements to manage our fixed to floating interest rate position by converting certain fixed-rate debt to floating-rate debt. We had no interest rate derivative instruments outstanding as of December 31, 2015 and 2014, or during the years ended December 31, 2015, 2014, or 2013.

Foreign Currency Risk

We are exposed to exchange rate fluctuations on transactions entered into by our international operations that are denominated in currencies other than the local (functional) currencies of these operations. To manage our exposure to these exchange rate fluctuations, we use foreign currency exchange and purchase contracts. These contracts are not designated as hedging instruments for accounting purposes, and therefore they are classified as economic hedges. As of December 31, 2015, we had commitments to purchase $292 million of U.S. dollars. These commitments matured on or before January 31, 2016 resulting in a gain of $10 million in the first quarter of 2016.

Environmental Compliance Program Price Risk

We are exposed to market risk related to the volatility in the price of credits needed to comply with various governmental and regulatory environmental compliance programs. Certain of these programs require us to blend biofuels into the products we produce, and we are subject to such programs in most of the countries in which we operate. These countries set annual quotas for the percentage of biofuels that must be blended into the motor fuels consumed in these countries. As a producer of motor fuels from petroleum, we are obligated to blend biofuels into the products we produce at a rate that is at least equal to the applicable quota. To the degree we are unable to blend at the applicable rate, we must purchase biofuel credits (primarily RINs in the U.S.). We are exposed to the volatility in the market price of these credits, and we manage that risk by purchasing biofuel credits when prices are deemed favorable. For the years ended December 31, 2015, 2014, and 2013, the cost of meeting our obligations under these compliance programs was $440 million, $372 million, and $517 million, respectively. These amounts are reflected in cost of sales.

VALERO ENERGY CORPORATION

Effective January 1, 2015, we became subject to additional requirements under GHG emission programs, including the cap-and-trade systems, as discussed in Note 19. Under these cap-and-trade systems, we purchase various GHG emission credits available on the open market. Therefore, we are exposed to the volatility in the market price of these credits. The cost to implement certain provisions of the cap-and-trade systems are significant; however, we have recovered the majority of these costs from our customers for the year ended December 31, 2015 and expect to continue to recover the majority of these costs in the future. For the years ended December 31, 2015, 2014, and 2013, the net cost of meeting our obligations under these compliance programs was immaterial.

Fair Values of Derivative Instruments

The following tables provide information about the fair values of our derivative instruments as of December 31, 2015 and 2014 (in millions) and the line items in the balance sheets in which the fair values are reflected. See Note 19 for additional information related to the fair values of our derivative instruments.

As indicated in Note 19, we net fair value amounts recognized for multiple similar derivative contracts executed with the same counterparty under master netting arrangements, including cash collateral assets and obligations. The tables below, however, are presented on a gross asset and gross liability basis, which results in the reflection of certain assets in liability accounts and certain liabilities in asset accounts.
